Mariner Swoops Past

Venus Data Gathered By U.S. Spacecraft

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) Mariner V skimmed within 2,480 miles of Venus at 10:34 a.m. PDT today on an atmosphere sampling mission similar to that of a Russian craft which parachuted a capsule to the planet's surface Wednesday.

Flight controllers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratories here said signals indicated all instruments on the U.S. craft were working and data was being recorded on tape for playback several hours later.

One of the key experiments—measuring atmospheric depth and density by distortion of radio waves—took place as the 540-pound craft swept behind Venus at a speed of 19,000 an hour shortly after its closest approach.

The tinkling tones of its radio carrier wave, which carries coded data signals, were interrupted as the craft was hidden from earth by the planet.

EXTREMELY HOT

Bending of the waves by Venus' cloudy atmosphere—which the Soviet Venus IV confirmed as mostly carbon dioxide and extremely hot—was expected to show the density of the atmosphere and how far it extends from the surface.

The signals stopped at 10:37 a.m. and resumed 23 minutes later.

During the flyby, instruments on Mariner V measured the amount of hydrogen and oxygen in the upper fringes of Venus' atmosphere. From this, U.S. scientists hoped to deduce the density of the heavier lower layer of carbon dioxide and thus check the accuracy of the Soviet craft's findings.

Strength of emissions from sunlight-excited atoms of hydrogen and oxygen was a measure of heat in the upper atmosphere. Scientists said they could calculate from this the heat on the surface, which Venus IV radioed was 536 degrees Fahrenheit.

Only hint of trouble came a few hours before the flyby when ground transmitters ran into a 30-minute delay in sending a backup signal to start the tape recorder. The recorder turned on automatically, however, and the mission went off as planned.

Estimates of the time it would take Mariner V to have its signals blacked out by Venus had ranged from 11 minutes to 26 minutes, depending upon the actual diameter of the planet.

NEW ABOLITION BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

OTTAWA (CP)—The Commons today gave first reading to a government bill which would limit the death penalty to persons who are convicted of murdering police officers or prison guards.

Solicitor-General Pennell said the bill for a five-year test period would limit capital punishment to slayers of prison guards and police.

Court Quashes Charges

By PAUL WILLIAMSON

Accused bank robber Carl Raymond had a few brief moments of freedom today after Magistrate William Ostler, on technicalities, threw out charges of armed robbery against Raymond and his wife.

Confusion reigned in the courtroom for a few moments, and a crowd converged in the adjacent hallway, everyone making suggestions of what to do next.

Raymond, 22, originally charged with the armed robbery of the Bank of Montreal at Fort and Richmond last Friday, was arrested again shortly after leaving the courtroom.

He has been re-charged and was to appear in court this afternoon.

WIFE FREE

At press time, the prosecutor's office had not yet decided whether to re-arrest Raymond's wife, 16-year-old Janet.

When Raymond appeared in court earlier, his wife was sitting in the front row with a policewoman, presumably waiting to be called herself.

Magistrate Ostler informed Raymond's counsel George Jones, appointed this morning by the legal aid society, he wished to read a statement with regard to the charge.

The charges against both the accused were contained on the same information which had been sworn before the court. Mrs. Raymond's case had been elevated from juvenile court Wednesday.

THREE REASONS

Magistrate Ostler "quashed the information" for three reasons.

He said the new charge against Mrs. Raymond was not the same as the original one laid in juvenile court.

He also said he would not accept an "information" (the legal document on which the charge is written) on which two people were charged with two different things.

His third reason was that it was not clear whether Mrs. Raymond was being charged as a principal in the crime, or as aiding and abetting.

When the magistrate pronounced the charges quashed, confusion took over.

Raymond, in the prisoner's box, appeared bewildered. When the court officer attempted to lead him back to the jail,

PEARKES TO ACCEPT ANOTHER EXTENSION?

PEARKES
. . . in demand

OTTAWA—Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes is expected to remain in his post for another six months.

Mr. Pearkes, who was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia in 1960, is nearing the end of a second one-year extension of the regular five-year term.

It is understood he has been asked to remain for another six months and is expected to accept.

Mr. Pearkes' current term runs out at the end of the year.

A spokesman at Government House today said Mr. Pearkes would not make any comment on the report because any announcement must come from Ottawa "but they're still hoping to move at the end of the month."

Authorities Fight Rash Of Anti-War Incidents

PORTLAND POLICE CUT ANTI-DRAFT 'CHAIN-IN'

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Six draft protesters chained themselves to the entrance of the Selective Service Office in Portland today.

They blocked the entrance for 45 minutes until police used metal cutters to snap the thick chains.

The protestors were dragged by their feet to a waiting police wagon chanting "Hell no, we won't go".

They were dragged about 30 feet with their heads against the ground.

They were charged with disordery conduct.

They were all Reed College students, police said.

A group of anti-war demonstrators tried to storm an induction centre in Chicago today in another of a series of incidents designed to build up sentiment against U.S. Vietnam involvement.

Chicago police repelled the would-be intruders at the induction centre door and arrested 11 males and seven females.

About 70 persons had been parading in front of the induction centre, just west of Chicago's Loop, when some of them broke ranks and tried to enter the building.

In Wisconsin and California University authorities have moved against student leaders of anti-war and anti-draft protests after demonstrators in Madison and Oakland clashed with police.

In Washington sources said the U.S. Army may use paratroops to augment the Pentagon's civilian guard force in preventing disruption or worse in a planned massive anti-war demonstration Saturday.

University of Wisconsin officials moved to oust leaders of a campus anti-war sit-in Wednesday which was broken up by riot-trained Madison city police. At least 65 persons were injured in the melee.

Demonstrators discussed classroom strikes as a possible retaliatory measure. They were supported by several hundred sympathetic faculty members.

The demonstrators were protesting the presence of representatives of the Dow Chemical Co., manufacturer of napalm for the war in Vietnam, on campus to interview job applicants.

VIOLATE RULES

On the west coast, Arleigh Williams, dean of students at the University of California's Berkeley campus, said his office will charge at least 20 students with violating university rules in the on-campus anti-war rallies.

Anti-draft demonstrators continued their protest at the besieged Oakland army induction centre and the arrest of 91 squatters at the door brought to more than 300 the numbers of persons seized since the protest began.

Governor Ronald Reagan, at the national governors conference on a cruise to the Virgin Islands, warned that if demonstrators step up their protest, California could use the national guard.

Brutality Charged

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — About 3,500 University of Wisconsin students assembled today and protested that a three-hour campus disturbance which resulted in the injury of nearly 100 persons was caused by "police brutality."

'Less Optimistic'

QUEBEC (CP)—Premier Daniel Johnson said today he is "less optimistic" about a quick end to the 29-day-old Montreal transit strike following his meeting Wednesday night with both sides in the dispute. However, the premier indicated he was more optimistic about settlement of a dispute involving Quebec radiologists.

WON'T 'INTERFERE'

Sask. Takes Over College Finances

REGINA (CP)—Premier Thatcher said Wednesday night the provincial government will assume direct financial control of the University of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Thatcher, in an address to the Potashville Education Association, said that while the government will financially control the university, "it will not interfere with internal operations."

The premier also announced Welfare Minister McIsaac has been handed the provincial education portfolio and the job of spearheading a new approach to educational finance which will involve more government control in all education spending.

He said changes would be made in the education act to help control costs at the local levels.

"We do not intend in any way to impinge on local autonomy," he explained. "But I must say we shall try to find far more practical financial controls over the power of school boards to spend provincial money."

On university spending, Mr. Thatcher said:

"In essence, the university will be obliged to make its financial requests to the legislature in the same manner as any other department. For example, they will have to request so much for salaries, so much for travelling and so much for new buildings."

He said the university today is fast becoming one of the government's largest spending departments.

This year, the government must find $28,000,00 for University of Saskatchewan and the campus population is growing at a rate of more than 1,200 students a year.

EARTH-LIKE ROCK INDICATED ON VENUS

By ROBERT EVANS

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Russia's Venus IV space capsule sent back messages indicating that the surface of Venus consists of solid rocks like those on earth, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today.

Dr. Vladimir Siforov, a prominent Soviet specialist on long-distance communications, told Tass that radioed reports as Venus reached the planet Wednesday indicated the surface rocks have physical properties like the silicates of the earth.

Before the landing there had been many theories about the surface hidden behind the shroud of clouds that veil Venus.

Experts' ideas about the surface ranged from a scorching inferno of dusty desert without a scrap of moisture to a waste covered with ice and water.

Tass quoted Siforov as saying the report on a rocky surface needed checking by an automatic station which would transmit information from the surface of the planet.

The Russians have not indicated the life expectancy of the instruments aboard the automatic station, but they did say the station was not equipped for picture transmission.

Members of the Soviet design team hoped the epoch-making Venus IV would discover life on the mystery planet, it was reported today.

But information relayed back during the instrument capsule's 90-minute float-down through the thick clouds around the planet indicated life is unlikely to exist there.

As it descended by parachute, the package reported there was no free oxygen in any significant quantity in the Venusian atmosphere and that the surface temperature was 530 Fahrenheit.

It also revealed that the main component of the planet's atmosphere was carbon dioxide and that pressure on the surface was up to 15 times that of the earth's atmosphere, all of which virtually precludes any form of life as it is known on earth.

HOW WE IGNORE OUR OLD FOLKS

B.C. Offers Good Plan But Alberta Offers Cash

By PETE LOUDON

If you're broke and old in British Columbia, the best thing you can do for yourself is move to Alberta.

If you become so infirm in B.C. that you must enter a private hospital, the welfare department will pay $230 on your behalf, (including your pension cheque).

This is so far below the $270 that private hospitals say is required, you will have a hard time finding a bed.

In Alberta the private hospital would be paid $375 on your behalf.

You would pay $2.50 a day out of your old age pension and have money left over. The Alberta government would pay a $10 per day subsidy to make up the balance of your bill.

In B.C., your pension cheque would be forfeited and it would meet the first $105 of the $236 payment. Ten per cent of the balance would be recovered by the province from the municipality you live in. Fifty per cent would be indirectly paid by the federal government.

In B.C., the province actually pays only $50 of your bill—about 21 per cent. The federal government would pay 75 per cent.

This is great for conserving provincial revenues to meet things like debt charges of hydro developments. But it works out tough for the patient.

British Columbia has a plan for extension of $1 per day care for the incapacitated elderly who need bed care—but it's a long way from reality. This final chapter in a series tells how a neighbor province met a similar emergency without waiting for the community conscience to meet the need.

SO ALANO LOOKS TO UNITED APPEAL

Spending Spree Over When Sober

By TED GASKELL

"We'd be broke by spring if it weren't for United Appeal," a member of the Alano Club said today, "and scores of reformed alcoholics would have lost their haven from the temptation of liquor."

With the $4,000 from the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal not only can the club stay open but it can brighten its fading interior and make it attractive to the men and women who use its facilities, not only as a temperance social club but to meet and discuss problems with their fellows.

The Alano Club has been operating, and paying its own way, for about 18 years, in its second floor quarters at Broad and Johnson.

Now it has fallen on hard times.

It takes about $400 a month for rent and other overhead. Less than 100 members pay their $2 a month dues and the club's savings, amassed during years of successful bingos and other functions, are dwindling.

During a tour of the club with its billiard room, games room, meeting room, lounge and coffee shop, the member said "the club is important to the reformed alcoholic. Once he has given up liquor he must have somewhere to go. It's no use him going to the cocktail bars and clubs with friends for his social life. He can't sit and drink ginger ale while his friends take liquor."

At least not at first. He might later when he becomes self-sufficient and doesn't need the Alano Club any more.

But the Alano Club is a "halfway point". Here the reformed alcoholic can meet others with the same problem. He can talk out his fears and worries, have a snack or a sandwich, a cup of coffee or a milk shake without being exposed to liquor in any way.

No one who has been drinking is allowed in the club. "We'll accept people with hangovers if they are members, but this isn't a sobering-up service," said the member.

Before anyone can join he or she—there are as many women as men among the members—must be a member of Alcoholics Anonymous and must have been sober for a month.

Although this is a stipulation, the club is not connected in any way with AA, although it does rent out its small meeting room to the local groups for their meetings.

The member told this story:

"I came here in 1951. I had money but no job, no self confidence or self respect and I was not welcome at home. But I have stayed sober, returned to my work and family and recently I retired."

"Thousands of people have been helped here. We get about 50 members a day dropping in to talk or for coffee. But not every story is a success story although many have been helped to get jobs and get back on their feet. Many are sent by hospitals and doctors."

Most alcoholics are in the business and professional group. "Less than 12 per cent are skid road types," said the member. "The professional man can afford to drink and he feels he has enough intelligence to drink without it becoming a problem. But they become alcoholics.

"We have had them here but they don't keep up their membership," he said. "They get back to their businesses or professions."

Don't they help out financially?

"It's the hardest thing in the world to get a dollar out of a drunk. When they are drinking they are the big time spenders but when they sober up they are more conscious of their obligations. For so long their families have taken second place."

"We have to look to United for our help," he said.

Th' rocket thet looks an' sails away may live t' look another day.

. . . OLD FOLKS

Private hospitals are the places we keep our elderly people when they are confined to bed.

When they are mobile we place them in boarding homes. If they are welfare cases, their old age pension cheque of $105 is paid to the boarding home operator in B.C.

(The province pays a comforts allowance of up to $16 for each case and also meets all medical bills and supplies free medicine.)

But in Alberta, the patient keeps his pension, pays a $2.50-per-day co-insurance rate and the boarding home gets a $5 daily subsidy from the government. Income to the operator in Alberta is $225 compared to $105 in B.C.

In Alberta the law states that a private hospital must accept 85 per cent of the welfare cases assigned to it, in order to qualify for subsidies.

Can Refuse Cases

In B.C. there is no such stipulation. Private hospitals can and do refuse welfare patients. Often when a patient is transferred to an acute care hospital (such as Royal Jubilee or St. Joseph's) he finds on his release that his private hospital bed has become unavailable.

That's why we have 50 such patients, well enough for private hospitals, not sick enough for acute hospital care, in acute care hospitals here today. It costs $30 a day for their care in an acute hospital. But there's no other place for them.

The Alberta government has been under fire recently over its system of paying subsidies to private enterprise. It has recently announced it is accepting no more applications from private nursing homes. Publically-owned hospitals for the aged are expected to replace them ultimately.

Newspaper articles have denounced the level of care given by some of the subsidized hospitals.

Public hospitals for the aged are more acceptable to most people. It's repugnant to see profit-making in care of aged. But until that comes about, the Alberta system, employed here with strict inspections, would vastly improve our B.C. arrangements.

Big Difference

The big difference, of course, is the money Alberta is willing to spend to see that its old folks are cared for adequately, about double the B.C. rates.

(It's interesting to note that the federal government believes fair payment to a private hospital is $305 a month for patient care—$75 more than the B.C. government scale. That's the amount Ottawa pays a city private hospital for care of an elderly Indian patient.)

Many social workers here believe most of our problems would be solved if operators were receiving anything like the $225 they get in Alberta boarding homes or the $375 paid private hospitals.

True, most of them believe care of the aged is no place for private enterprise where business is business. But that argument can come later. First get the beds.

Many social workers see a need for a separate department of government to study and improve and administrate the care of the aged.

At the present time this is done partly by health, welfare, B.C. Hospital Insurance Service and the mental health branch. Also concerned are municipal social workers, health workers, fire inspectors and various local charitable agencies.

The duplication of effort, red tape and confusion that often results is a frustration to all concerned.

There is one other sore need—a central agency to advise the elderly and their families on the course to follow when age causes family disruptions.

Some private agencies attempt this. But nowhere, for example, is there a published document which outlines the types of care available, classifies boarding homes and private hospitals according to rate structures and services, or offers guidance to families of aged persons.

Another Solution

B.C. Hospital Insurance Service offers another solution to the present crisis. If it can be made to work it would be an improvement over the Alberta plan, for private hospitals for the aged at least. It doesn't embrace the problem of boarding homes.

Basically it is an extension of the present extended care plan for elderly persons who are confined to bed, offering them accommodation in chronic care hospitals, for $1 per day under BCHIS.

The province has offered to pay 60 per cent of the cost of building such hospitals after federal government grants of $2,000 per bed are deducted, wherever the community raises the balance.

If the community's share, spread over a hospital district, increases taxes beyond four mills, the province will pay 80 % of the building cost.

The province offers a similar deal to non-profit societies who would undertake to raise their share of the cost through charity. Few societies, however, want to risk being liable for hospital operation in an inflationary period.

The community plan of course puts the responsibility for much of the cost on to the homeowner.

The homeowner is reeling now. He's been fighting tax increases the only way he can—by voting against community projects such as schools and hospitals.

Two years ago Greater Victoria voters turned down a plan to extend the acute care hospitals, despite a dramatic need. It's unlikely a money bylaw in support of chronic care hospitals for the aged would be any more successful.

So for the foreseeable future, unless the B.C. government raises its welfare rates to boarding homes and private hospitals, perhaps the best hopes for the impoverished aged do rest in moving to Alberta.

JOEY STARTED IT ALL SAYS THE PM OF B.C.

Premier Bennett Wednesday said he was "glad" that Newfoundland Premier Smallwood had modestly declared he would prefer to be known as "Joey" rather than prime minister or premier.

Then Mr. Benentt, still justifying his new office door plaque of Prime Minister to reporters, pounced.

"I like Premier Smallwood personally but I would like to point out that he brought it up at a federal-provincial conference two years ago.

"Of all the premiers at the conference, he was the only one objecting.

"It was on Mr. Smallwood's initiative that the whole thing was discussed—not on my initiative at all—but it was him that brought it up and as a result it was declared the two terms mean the same thing."

Mr. Benentt added that even Prime Minister Pearson ferred to provincial leaders as prime ministers at that conference.

But he repeated an earlier statement that he didn't really care whether people call him prime minister or premier.

REGINA (CP) — Premier Ross Thatcher isn't getting heady over his recent re-election to the Saskatchewan legislature.

Mr. Thatcher said Wednesday he's not going to change the sign on his door to read: "Office of the Prime Minister."

He said he is happy with "Premier of Saskatchewan".

"As far as I'm concerned, there's only one prime minister, and he's in Ottawa," he said.

New Pressure at UN For Rhodesia Force

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—Seventeen Asian and African countries sought support today for new demands that Britain use force to bring to heel the white-minority government of Rhodesia.

Britain has already informed the United Nations that it does not intend to use its armed forces against the rebel regime of Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith.

The British stand—spelled out in the assembly's policy debate by Foreign Secretary George Brown—has been rejected by the 17 protesting countries headed by Tanzania.

Informed sources said the African-Asian group is basing its demand on the generally acknowledged fact that economic sanctions ordered against Rhodesia by the Security Council last December have failed.

The proposed resolution would affirm that the only "effective and speedy way of bringing down the rebellion is through the use of force" by Britain, and would state that sanctions must be "comprehensive and mandatory and backed by force" to have any effect.

It would also condemn the presence of South African police in Rhodesia and call on Britain to expel them.

South Africa has contended that its police are posted in Rhodesia for the sole purpose of preventing terrorists from travelling through that country en route to South Africa.

Most diplomats at the United Nations have written off the boycott against Rhodesia as a futile move that has no chance of toppling the white government.

Bombing Pause Offer 'Deception'—Hanoi

HONG KONG (Reuters)—North Vietnam rejected today the U.S. offer for a conditional bombing pause in return for peace talks. The offer was repeated by U.S. State Secretary Dean Rusk at a press conference Oct. 12.

The official Hanoi daily Nhan Dan said the offer was nothing but sheer deception.

The newspaper, quoted by the North Vietnam news agency, said that the root cause of the conflict was American aggression.

This must be removed by a definite and unconditional end to the bombing of North Vietnam, recognition of the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front as the representatives of the South Vietnamese people, and the withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam, Nhan Dan added.

Voters, Cong Both Bored By Campaign

SAIGON (AP) — The South Vietnamese electoral campaign to name a House of Representatives next Sunday has been remarkably free of the Viet Cong terrorism that marked two previous elections.

There is evidence that the Viet Cong organization is having trouble working up the enthusiasm of its agents just as the government is in arousing the voters.

The election will name a 137-man House of Representatives which will complete the establishment of political structure began in September with the election of a president, vice-president and 60-man Senate. The House election will be followed by presidential inaugural ceremonies Oct. 31 and it had been feared that intensive Viet Cong activity would precede and cover this period.

lawyer George Jones asked the magistrate "isn't he free?"

"The information is quashed," replied Magistrate Ostler.

Mr. Jones immediately called to the court officer and told Raymond to leave the courtroom by another exit.

Raymond slipped out the side door for a tearful reunion with his wife. Several detectives in the court immediately converged on the pair in the hallway and took them to a small witness room while the prosecutor's office tried to untangle the situation.

After the prosecutor's office re-charged Raymond, he was led back to the cells.

Mrs. Raymond was released and left with a social worker from the Family and Children's Service.

Tot Survived Fall From Speeding Car

CRANBROOK (CP)—A small child survived a fall from an auto travelling at 50 miles an hour Wednesday on Highway 93 near here.

Cynthia Pepper, 2, of Moyie, B.C., was playing with other children at St. Eugene Hospital here after what her mother described "a moment of horror."

"We didn't realize what had happened until my husband saw Cynthia rolling along the side of the road in his rear view mirror," said Mrs. Barton Pepper.

"I was out of the car long before it stopped and Cynthia was getting to her feet by herself when I reached her. She didn't lose consciousness for a moment."

'Police Did It'

PARIS (AP)—A French journalist has quoted President de Gaulle as saying that "the police" were at the bottom of President John F. Kennedy's assassination.

Raymond Tournoux, in a book, tells of de Gaulle's reported opinions on the assassination. Excerpts from the book, la Tragedie du General, published by the magazine Paris Match. Tournoux quotes de Gaulle as saying about the assassination:

"The police did the job, or else they pulled the strings or else they let it happen. In any case they were involved. That always happens in a country where there are racial hatreds, or oppressors and oppressed, or the oppressors are more afraid than the oppressed, or the police, or at least certain of its element, work with the oppressors."

'They Died in Our Arms' Ship Survivors Relate

SAN PEDRO, Calif. (LAT) — Three of five survivors of the freighter Panoceanic Faith that sank last week off Alaska arrived here Wednesday and told of the horrors of the sea tragedy that claimed 35 lives in the frigid waters of the North Pacific.

"There were seven of us in an inflated rubber liferaft dropped by a Coast Guard plane," related Oscar Wiley, 28, of Oakland, Calif.

"Four of the men died in front of our eyes — dropped dead in our arms before the rescue ship was able to pick us up."

Edwin Johnson, 43, of Detroit, told how two of the men apparently died from shock, the other two drowned in the life raft.

"Waves 15 and 20 feet high were breaking over the liferaft the 17 hours we were in it," Johnson continued. "Two of the men saved from the sea drowned from the waves that swamped the small raft."

John Kirk, 36, engineman of Modesto, Calif., told how the men, once in the raft after spending two hours in the 50 degree water, tried to help each other.

"There were whistles in the liferaft. The sea was so rough we blew whistles to let each other know we were still all right.

"Every few minutes we shouted roll. But as the hours passed the number answering dwindled until only three of us could respond. Ed Johnson was unconscious and dying by the time the Norwegian freighter reached us."

The Norwegian motorship Visund that rescued the trio 870 miles southwest of Kodiak nine days ago stopped at San Pedro Wednesday to return the survivors to their homes and to deliver bodies of four, that perished in the disaster.

"I was perhaps luckiest of the five to be alive," Johnson continued. "I was unconscious when they lifted me aboard the Visund. I would have been dead in a few minutes.

"There was only a slight pulse at my throat. The Norwegians knew what to do. They restored the body heat quickly. They saved my life."

Two other survivors, Gordon L. Campbell of Oakland and Lewis E. Gray, Jr., of Houston, were rescued by the Japanese freighter Igahura Maru and are en route to Yokohama.

Possible negligence in the sinking was indicated by the three survivors.

"We were told to plan to abandon ship at 6 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 9," related engineman Kirk.

"Yet, when we finally started into the lifeboats nine hours later at three in the afternoon, the ship went down before there was time to lower the lifeboats."

"We know how it happened," said Johnson. "But all the facts will have to come out in the Coast Guard inquiry here Oct. 26.

'TRUE CITIZEN ARMY' URGED BY U.K. TORY

BRIGHTON, England (AP)—A leading Conservative member of Parliament called today for the creation of "a true citizen army" to help defend Western Europe and to maintain in Britain "the military spirit and the will to self-defence".

Enoch Powell, defence spokesman for the Opposition Conservatives, told the party's annual convention that only with such an army will Britain "remain a credible, not to say a leading factor in the defence of Western Europe".

Powell did not mention a return to national conscription which the Conservative government ended in 1964. But his statement was generally construed as a call for some form of national service.

His remark came during an attack on the Labor government's recent move to cut in half the size of the territorial army, a volunteer force.

Allow Abortions To Be Easy, Early

OTTAWA (CP) — Any woman should be able to have a legal abortion in the first three months of pregnancy if she is ready to take written responsibility for the step and assume the risk of the operation, the Commons health committee was told today.

The proposal was made by the Humanist Fellowship of Montreal Inc.

It was coupled with another that any woman who wishes an abortion between three and five months of pregnancy should be able to have one after the case is studied and passed on by a medical board in a licensed hospital.

"Up to three months of pregnancy a legal abortion should be granted on request," the organization said in a brief to the committee.

"None should be granted after five months of pregnancy except in unusual circumstances."

OPPOSES PRESENT LAW

The fellowship maintained that the present prohibition against abortion except where the mother's life is endangered "is an attempt to impose on all the citizens of this country concepts held by some religious groups which are at present the cause of permanent injury and death to many."

It estimated that 1,000,000 women in the United States and 100,000 in Canada annually undergo illegal abortions. It said death results to probably 8,000 in the U.S. and 800 in Canada and many others are crippled for life by infections, blood loss and injuries.

"As a result of the present laws, a large number of women, especially those who cannot afford the price, may go through with their pregnancy and bring an unwanted child into the world . . .

"It is important for a society which cares about human beings and about their health and well-being to bring about conditions where most children will be wanted children."

Home-Building Boost Promised by Bennett

Premier Bennett Wednesday said he will introduce new legislation at the next session to encourage more home construction.

"It's something beyond that, that I'm thinking about," he replied at a press conference when asked if he meant to extend the $500 home acquisition grant.

He refused to indicate what form the legislation would take but dropped hints it may be related to Saanich's experimental program of providing low-rent public housing by buying existing homes scattered through the municipalities.

NO 'GHETTOES'

"I praised it then, and I'm praising it even more now," he said, adding he was in agreement with Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell's recent statement that new public housing projects should not be large apartment block "ghettoes" but individual homes dispersed widely through the community.

"I will be recommending something to the legislature to encourage the building of individual houses," he said.

"But there's a limit to what a provincial government can do because the federal government has control of the monetary system."

Mr. Bennett continued his attack on Ottawa as the principal cause of the housing crisis by drying up mortgage funds through its deficit financing.

He said Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce chairman Neil McKinnon's accusation that the federal government was guilty of a "massive swindle" through inflationary policies was an even harsher condemnation than his (Bennett's).

The federal cabinet should either sue Mr. McKinnon or resign, the premier suggested.

"Either they're guilty of that swindle or they're not.

"They (federal cabinet) should either take action against this head of a Canadian chartered bank—because this statement is damaging to Canada—or if it is true then the Liberal government should resign."

Hot Line Comment Ruled Fair

Language used by a Victoria radio station open line moderator "might have been a little more temperate" but the editorial comment of Aug. 15 "would appear to be within the bounds of comment."

This was stated in a letter from the Board of Broadcast Governors following a complaint from the B.C. Federation of Labour which was intitiated by the Victoria Labour Council.

No details of the editorial itself were given except it was by Ralph Pashley of Radio Station CKDA.

The board, in its letter, also said that the true test of freedom of speech is "extending this to unpopular views."

Several labor council delegates urged a boycott of the products of advertisers on the open line program but no action was taken after they were told council officers met an official of the station to discuss the situation.

Rival Unions Have The Same Officers

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The acting president of a pulp union local admitted Tuesday that he and three other officers hold similar jobs with a rival union.

The dual roles were disclosed Monday by Peter Marshall, an international organizer of the International Brotherhood of Pulp Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers.

Mr. Marshall said acting president Len Shankel of the international union's Local 612, vice-president George Smith, secretary Mickey Finnigan and treasurer Noel Noble hold identical posts with the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada.

The international and Canadian unions are locked in a bitter jurisdictional dispute throughout British Columbia.

"Yes that's true," said Mr. Shankel when asked about the allegations.

"We've never made any bones about it."

Mr. Shankel said the international organizer knew he and the other three men "have always been for the Canadian union" and still swore them in as international officers.

Mr. Shankel said he and the other officers conduct regular meetings of Local 9 of the Canadian union as well as those of Local 612 of the international.

Mr. Marshall said an election of officers for Local 612 will take place sometime in November.

A bid by the Canadian union to wrest certification from the international at two pulp mills here was rejected in September by the Labor Relations Board.

In Italy, everyone thinks he's a racing car driver. That's why we've had to build a lot of things into this Fiat you wouldn't expect in a family car.

In the early 1900's, the victories of drivers like Felice Nazzaro, Pietro Bordino and Carlo Salamano made Italians the most racing-minded people in the world. Result: Italy has virtually become one big racetrack.

So isn't it natural that a family car designed in Italy should have racing spirit — something you wouldn't normally find in an imported sedan?

That's what racing-minded Italians have discovered in this new Fiat 124. A lively 1197 cc engine that'll exceed 87 mph; an all-synchromesh 4-on-the-floor; sure-footed disc brakes all around; and exceptional road-holding suspension that includes a transverse Panhard rod, hydraulic shock absorbers and a stabilizer bar.

But because the Fiat 124 is a family car, it has family features galore: wider-opening doors for easier entry; a comfortable, unusually roomy interior; extra-large windows so everyone can enjoy Italy's great scenery; a huge luggage compartment that holds everything a family needs on a long trip; safety padded dash and sun visors for added protection; padded arm rests for comfort and convenience; plus a powerful heater and defroster (for those Canadian-like winters in northern Italy).

Now find out why The Family Car was voted "Car of the Year" by all European automotive editors. See your Fiat dealer. 124 Sedan.

The Juggernaut

THE WAFFLING BY CITY council members which led — after three negative votes — to a decision in August 1966, to let the Hydro authorities run a 1,100-foot power-line swath 100 feet wide through a corner of Thetis Lake Park has now been paralleled by the parks committee which has reversed its demand for below-ground stump removal in the affected area. The heavy-handed treatment of the whole affair by B.C. Hydro engenders cynicism in the public mind.

The crowning touch to the affair is the Hydro's donation of about 49 acres of parkland to the city in return for the right of way. That 49 acres is not "new park" as it has been described, and it is no bargain.

In 1960, the Hydro's predecessors, the B.C. Electric, persuaded the city council to permit a power line right-of-way down the eastern side of Thetis Lake Park — a 26-acre strip 250 feet wide to be denuded of trees. The strip cut off a projecting 48.9-acre triangle from the body of the park, and this parcel was included in the deal with the proviso that the public would continue to have right of access. The property has no road access, is bounded on two sides by Thomas Francis Park and Thetis Lake Park, and is hardly usable for anything but parkland. (As a last bargaining point, the B.C. Electric threw in some property at Durrance Lake, which so far the city has not been able to develop.)

This, then, is the generous contribution which Hydro now offers to the city, and threatens to withdraw if it is not relieved of the task of cutting 56 stumps on the new southern power-line route to below ground level.

When Hydro was persuading city council to grant the southern right-of-way some 15 months ago it argued that it would cost $20,000 to divert the city-to-Langford line a few yards so as to miss the park property. And this, it was stressed, would be a serious waste of public money—as though carving up a park entailed no losses to the public which owns it. Now, however, this emerges merely as a bargaining point, not a necessity, since Hydro threatens to re-route its line — a simple matter it now appears — if the city insists that it cut stumps to ground level. It would also of course, withdraw the offer of the 48.9-acres —to which the public is guaranteed access in any case.

In all these deals — six years ago, 15 months ago and again today, there is a sorry appearance of a provincial juggernaut pushing a city council around to get its own way—and the city council does not seem willing to fight.

Lost somewhere in the scuffle is the principle of the preservation of irreplaceable parkland, presumably the solemn trust of the people's elected representatives. The once-in-a-lifetime demand of 1960 has been followed by the once-again-in-a-lifetime demand of 1966 and now the ultimatum of 1967. And Thetis Lake Park, internationally known as an invaluable and in many respects unique nature sanctuary, is being nibbled and scarified in the name of industrial necessity which later turns out not to be so necessary after all. The park deserves better than this precarious brink existence, and the people, who own it, should so insist.

Still Comfortable, But

THE COMFORTABLE MARGIN by which Premier John Robarts has retained power for his Conservative government in Ontario leaves him with ample elbow room to proceed with his programs. But he cannot ignore the fact that his majority has been cut from 46 seats to 21, or that he very nearly was faced with an NDP official Opposition. While the Liberals retained that position with a gain of four seats, to 28, the socialist party jumped from 13 to 20 to help cut the Conservatives to the lowest seat total since 1948.

The Conservative popular vote remains a healthy 42 per cent of the total cast, but here, also, ground has been lost from 1963's 49 per cent. The Liberals slipped three per centage points to 32 and the NDP shows an impressive increase from 15 to 26 per cent.

It is probably less surprising that the Conservatives, in power for the last 24 years, have lost some ground than it is that they continue to retain such a strong hold on the electorate. This is a tribute to Mr. Robarts' leadership.

Both Liberals and NDP draw optimism from the results insofar as future prospects are concerned. This is a natural reaction for parties which have gained seats, but it must be remembered that the Ontario House now has 117 seats, compared with 108 in the election of four years ago.

Between them, however, Liberal and NDP forces are in a position to provide a louder chorus of dissent. This week's voting trend may make it more audible to the government.

A Voice From Space—in Russian

THE WORLD TODAY HAILS A Soviet scientific and technological triumph in putting equipment safely on Venus for twelve hours and transmitting back to earth the first on-the-spot observations ever made of a sister planet.

The layman is left far behind in comprehension. It is next to a miracle that the extremely sensitive yet powerful equipment can be devised in the first place. The incredible feat of launching a vehicle into space to travel many millions of miles in order to reach Venus 50 million miles away; the accuracy of the landing, the mystery of the devices which gathered and transmitted unprecedented information back through space, and the "hellish fires" which eventually consumed the equipment in the 500 degree temperatures on the surface of Venus—all these provide a breath-taking and dramatic series of events that set our era apart from anything in the history of the world.

This is twentieth-century exploration and no mistake. Russia has added another first to its scientific record and a jewel of achievement to its crown.

'Tradition of the Sea'

CORONER GLEN MACDONALD of Vancouver, the holder of a deep sea master's ticket, has extended a gracious compliment to Russian seamen who participated in the recovery of the bodies of American crew members lost in the Panoceanic Faith sinking in the Gulf of Alaska.

Noting that some of the Russians had risked their lives in performing the tasks, and that the woman doctor aboard the Soviet ship had discharged her duties with proficiency, the coroner declared their actions "splendid" and "in the tradition of the sea."

Unhappily the Russians were unable to save the lives of the victims. But they have performed a service which relatives of the victims will appreciate. Mr. MacDonald did well in expressing a common gratitude to the officers and men of the visiting ship.

"... now to get it home ..."

FROM OTTAWA — By MAURICE WESTERN

Chance to Reform the Question Period

IF there is any logic in politics the Conservatives under Mr. Stanfield should be much more receptive than in the past to proposals for parliamentary reform.

Western

The reason is simple. There is a ministerial way of looking at parliamentary reform and there is an Opposition way. While they were disunited the Conservatives had little hope of forming a government and they were developing the habits of mind of a permanent Opposition.

With the advent of Mr. Stanfield, they can again think of themselves as the alternative to the government. If there is no serious reform and they succeed to the treasury benches, they will face precisely the same problems which have caused Mr. Pearson to urge changes in the rules.

It would, however, be unrealistic to expect sudden changes of attitudes. For one thing it is unwise, as Mr. Pearson found, to count political majorities before they have hatched. If Mr. Stanfield's plans miscarry, his career as Opposition leader may be longer than he now expects. In addition, some of his close advisers are entirely sincere in their view that the price of efficiency is too high if there is an impairment of Parliament's power to hold the government to account.

Thus the larger changes which have been discussed in Ottawa are likely to involve long and searching discussion and possibly hard bargaining among the various parties. Experience suggests, however, that more limited but useful reforms may be attainable, particularly in the improved atmosphere of the present session.

Too Often Dull

It might be of value to consider the question period which can be exciting in moments of crisis but is too often a dull interlude, focusing on nothing in particular and leading nowhere.

As any copy of Hansard will show, the curiosity of members is generally distributed over 20 or more unrelated questions. Much of the effort is wasted because this freedom to range is balanced by fairly restrictive rules enforced by Mr. Speaker. A high proportion of the questions are struck down as not urgent, argumentative, excessively general, repetitive, hypothetical or unacceptable for other reasons. Sometimes, after an argument, a member will attempt to reframe his question, often unsuccessfully, and quite frequently a minister will be cut short as he endeavors to explain the complexities of a situation.

The House has a few specialists in illegal questions, none more skilful than Mr. Churchill. The great advantage of an illegal question is that, although unacceptable and thus unanswerable, it goes on the record. Thus on a recent day, addressing the minister of transport, Mr. Churchill asked: "Recalling the minister's experience with the admirals over the past few years, is he confident that he will be able to deal just as ruthlessly with sailor Jack Pickersgill?"

Half a Sentence

On that particular occasion Mr. Hellyer managed half a sentence about full co-operation before running foul of Mr. Speaker's "Order please."

In general the amount of frustration generated by the present question period seems excessive when compared with the snippets of information which the hour produces. There is the further fact that every minister in the capital feels obligated to attend although in many cases it would be more profitable to the country if he was about his administrative duties.

The British have a quite different system. They have found it far more productive to concentrate on one ministry at a time according to arrangements worked out in advance. They do not expect the home secretary to be on hand if the subject is foreign affairs. But the matter being investigated is probed at some depth, with many supplements, so that the Opposition has a better chance of obtaining the information sought and the minister a better opportunity of explaining his case.

With some modifications, recognizing the diversity of our vast federation and widely varying regional interests, this system might be useful here. One suggestion, from a member who has given much thought to such reforms, is that the first day of the week should remain open as at present, with no restriction of targets. The greater freedom accorded to ministers by the substitution of the British practice on other days could be balanced by a relaxation of the rather stringent rules now applying to questions.

The general practice in recent years has been to introduce procedural changes on a trial basis for a limited period. It would be interesting to see the results of such an experiment with the British practice. While it would probably offer mixed tactical advantages and disadvantages to both sides, there is no reason to believe that the balance would be materially altered. If question period became more productive we would have a better informed Parliament, which should be to the general benefit.

FROM UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — By WILLIAM R. FRYE

Probing Mid-East Issues

THE principal subject under negotiation between the United States and the United Arab Republic, diplomatic sources here say, is Israeli passage through the Suez Canal and the Strait of Tiran. The United States has been seeking from Cairo specific answers to such questions as these:

Frye

1. If Israel withdraws her troops from occupied territory, will Israeli flagships be allowed to pass through the canal? Through the Strait of Tiran?

2. If not, will Israeli cargoes be allowed through?

3. Will the Sinai Desert be dimilitarized?

Exploratory negotiations on these and related subjects have been under way quietly for some weeks, informants say, and are now reaching a critical stage.

The latest in this series of American-Egyptian and British-Egyptian meetings took place Monday between United States UN delegate Arthur J. Goldberg and U.A.R. Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad.

Discussions

Goldberg and Riad previously met on Sept. 30 and Oct. 9. Riad conferred with Secretary of State Dean Rusk October 2. Riad's answers prior to October 16 are described as "evasive" and noncommittal. Goldberg's objective is said to be to obtain greater precision.

There was no immediate information as to his success on October 16.

The United States being in close touch with Israel, it is taken to be axiomatic that the substance of the talks is being conveyed to Tel Aviv for comment and reaction.

However, since Israel has refused to conduct negotiations with the Arabs through any intermediary, however friendly, neither the United States nor Britain, which is also intimately involved, is looked upon in this light. Nor is Washington acting on Israel's behalf.

A special British envoy, Sir Harold Beeley, arrived in Cairo October 15 to explore prospects directly with U.A.R. President Gamal Abdel Nasser.

The immediate subject of discussion is a plan to have the 15-nation UN Security Council meet and pass a resolution which would lay down "principles" for a Mideast settlement and appoint a "special representative" of UN Secretary-General U Thant to carry them out.

"Principles"

The "principles" would call on the one hand for an Israeli troop withdrawal (no acquisition of territory as the result of military conquest) and on the other, for Arab concessions to Israel (renunciation of belligerent rights).

Israel, however, has insisted that there should be no exchange of a specific obligation, the withdrawal of troops, for a vague commitment, such as the renunciation of belligerency.

Exactly what would renunciation of belligerency mean? Israel has wanted to know. Would it mean that, since the two countries were no longer at war, ships flying the Israeli flag would be permitted through the Suez Canal — once that waterway is reopened?

The U.A.R. has objected that passage of Israel flagships would be a particularly dramatic and humiliating concession to make. Riad has seemed to imply that Israeli cargoes would be allowed through in ships flying other flags.

But this has not been wholly clear, informants say, and in any event, Israel may no settle for anything less than completely unfettered use of the canal.

Different Concessions

Negotiations surrounding a possible Security Council resolution also involve Jordan and Syria, which are interested in obtaining an Israeli troop withdrawal from their territory, but from whom different concessions are being sought by Israel.

Goldberg has been in touch with former Jordanian Foreign Minister Muhammad El-aamiry, but if there have been any Syrian-American contacts of significance, they are not publicly known. It is assumed the Soviet Union has been dealing with Damascus.

A major obstacle, it is said, is the reluctance of all Arabs to pay a specific "price" — publicly or privately — for the Israeli troop withdrawal which they contend should take place unilaterally.

Thus they resist making clear and specific commitments. They indicate a willingness to make generalized concessions which others could then interpret, but this does not satisfy Israel.

Fire Drill

Fire Prevention is to the fore these days and having had considerable experience along this line in several school systems, I would like to note two or three points that are sometimes not carefully thought out.

The danger, as has been noted in the Times recently, is not so much from the fire itself but from suffocation by smoke and gases, and panic where children are trampled down.

Consequently, the time it takes to vacate a building is not very important and should not be emphasized except in extreme cases; the important points are order, discipline and control.

The position of the teacher with respect to the class is very important. He or she should be at the head of the class during fire drill with the exception of the very unusual case where the fire is in his or her classroom; in which case the teacher should see that all pupils get out of the room safely and then proceed at once to the front of the class.

The real danger is almost invariably in front where pupils may be pushed into a fire by those behind or may run into it in their wild rush to go out of the school by their usual route. The teacher should be able to stop the class at any time by word or sign; also to turn it around or reroute it. — Modoc.

Go-It-Alone Sidney

Your many readers in Sidney and North Saanich are at present concerned with the issues of amalgamation.

The "conclusions" of the Stevenson Kellogg Report suggest that these municipalities will be unable to remain viable unless they amalgamate. To one who has been concerned for some years in the affairs of Sidney this is an extraordinary and unjustified "guess". It is based on projection of exaggerated expenditures with minimized revenues, exaggerated conclusions regarding competition for industry and commerce, and a lack of appreciation of the progress of Sidney since incorporation.

Briefly the facts are that Sidney under councils ever cognizant of the sanctity of ratepayers' money has the lowest tax-rate of any town in B.C. No other municipality provides sewage facilities, street lighting, garbage collection, good shopping facilities, and ever-improving sidewalks, roads, and other facilities at such low cost. Sidney with a pay-as-we-go policy has no debt except for sewers. If the tax-rate in Sidney was raised to the level of Saanich or Victoria the town income would be almost doubled. So Sidney with its level streets, ideal for people with aging hearts and its low taxes is a Mecca for an ever-increasing number of retired people and workers in other areas.

Sidney will prosper best on its own, North Saanich, under wise leadership, should continue as an ideal rural municipality, a haven of peace free of the irritations of thrusting urban developments and "progress". — J. E. Bosher, 2499 Amherst, R.R. 2, Sidney.

Mr. Pete Loudon has written a fine front page challenge regarding our financially and physically disabled pioneers. He has also taken away the last shred of dignity from these fine men and women by referring to them as our "destitute aged."

I read his article hopefully, thinking he might include some constructive proposals to resolve this "mess we are in". Apart from repeated side-swipes at the boarding-homes and private hospitals (which, taken generally, are doing a good job with little encouragement) the article contains nothing upon which the "average citizen" can concentrate in order to help improve matters. What is to be done? — Miss E. Louise Bartlett, Physiotherapist, 150 Beach Drive.

As Maurice Said

I feel the attitude of many Canadians living in the provinces other than Quebec has been very ably presented by your columnist, Mr. Maurice Western, in his article on "Constitutional Fair Shares" in The Times of October 16.—A Reader.

According to Gosnell

R. E. Gosnell in 1914, in a book marked "Published by authority of the Government of B.C." uses both terms—Premier and Prime Minister.

The full title of Gosnell's book is: "The Year Book of British Columbia 1911-14". This suggests that in 1914 the terms were interchangeable. I have always understood that R. E. Gosnell was considered to be an authority in such matters.—H. Peters, 812 Newport Avenue.

Looking Back

From the Times, Oct. 19, 1907.

President C. M. Hays of the Grand Trunk Pacific, said today that the survey for the townsite of Prince Rupert is now being rushed to completion and lots will be on the market next spring.

Mr. Hays and his party will visit Victoria next week and will endeavor to come to some amicable arrangement with Premier McBride regarding the construction of a main line to Prince Rupert from Edmonton.

He said work will probably be pushed ahead steadily this winter on the Kitimat branch line.

Siberian Frontier Draws New Breed

By ANATOLE SHUB

IRKUTSK, U.S.S.R. — Siberia is Russia's new frontier — and at every turn one meets the new frontiersmen, young, confident, independent minded.

At Novosibirsk's elite Academic Village, scientists average less than 38 years old. At its show place electrical engineering works, the dynamic capable chief engineer, Nikolai Shkolnikov, is 38. At the Bratsk hydroelectric station, largest in the world, the local hero is engineer Alexei Marchuk, 32.

Some of the young people building Siberia were born there, for Russian settlements go back to the 17th century. Others were assigned there after graduation, or came for the premium pay scales and long paid vacations to European Russia.

But a high proportion came for the adventure — and freedom from the regimentation of older centres.

Although costly projects like the Bratsk power dam ($770 million) receive ultimate supervision in Moscow ministries, there can be little question of day-to-day interference or politicking.

●

The young scientists and engineers on the spot can, indeed must, exert all their creativity and initiative to solve the unparalleled technical problems presented by Siberia's harsh climate, fast-flowing rivers and rugged terrain. Young engineers like Marchuk could take risks and experiment.

Similarly, at the Novosibirsk Electrical Engineering Works, which produced four of the 18 turbine generators for the Bratsk dam, chief engineer Shkolnikov found much room to manoeuvre, experiment, improvise.

The new frontiersmen contrast sharply with some of the older political and economic officials one encounters. They are far better trained, as a rule, and display a broad knowledge of Western techniques.

The new giant cellulose complex at Bratsk depends largely on Swedish, British and West German machinery.

In building the Bratsk power station, engineer Marchuk derived one system of reinforcing the concrete from ideas developed by a French engineer.

Young Soviet scientists and engineers study such ideas through such institutions as the state scientific library at Novosibirsk, nearly half of whose five million books come from 50 foreign countries abroad. There are also some 4,000 foreign scientific and technical journals.

●

Alert and confident, young men like Shkolnikov and Marchuk are refreshingly free of the party jargon that enveIopes the Moscow resident.

Marchuk feels free to express his own tastss. Asked to comment on the voluminous Soviet literature on the Bratsk power station, the young engineer said:

"I don't agree that so much has been written, certainly not on a level with the work that was done here. I like best by far, the poem about the station by Yevtushenko."—

It is a striking comment on today's Russia that Yevgeny Yevtushenko. whose activities and travels remain under the supervision of the sectarians of the Writers' Union in Moscow, continues to inspire builders of the nation's most prestigious project.

But then Yevtushenko, too, is a Siberian.

(Next: Khabarovsk — does development of vast Siberia make economic sense?)

A DIALOGUE OF THE DEAF

Would Russia Support China or U.S.?

By DENNIS BLOODWORTH

Both the American State Department and the Pentagon believe that the United States must settle the problem of Vietnam before the Cultural Revolution and Mao Tse-tung both come to an end, and before China puts her house in order.

Any subsequent modification of Peking's militant Maoist line, the Americans believe, may lead to a highly undesirable rapprochament—however temporary, cynical and self-interested—between China and Russia.

But meanwhile there is a fundamental disagreement between American and Chinese opinion on how the Soviet Union would react to a conflict between the U.S. and China. Officials greet with skepticism any suggestion that the Soviet Union would spring to Mao's support in the event of hostilities between China and America.

Still the U.S.

Left-wing Chinese in touch with the mainland counter that while the Soviet Union may be Mao's principal enemy, China's is still the United States.

Although the Maoists may not want war, their reasons are far from comforting: they know that despite Mao's theory that any sophisticated invading force will be "drowned in a hostile sea" of Chinese guerrillas, a drastic situation might quickly arise which would give their moderate and "revisionist" opponents in the party and the army irrefutable arguments for calling on Russian aid to save the country—and they are convinced the Russians would promptly respond.

Moscow, they calculate, would never be responsible for shattering the Communist camp and justifying Mao's vilification of the Soviet Union by letting the "imperialists" pulverize even Maoist China. With revolutionary strife over Mao's Thought eclipsed by a new national unity among Chinese in the face of the common enemy, the Soveet Union would have a golden chance to confound the Maoists by proving herself a firm comrade-in-need.

Moreover, China could slap the United States across the face any time Washington threw down the gage, for Peking would have the hydrogen bomb, the power of nuclear blackmail, and the backing of the Soviet Union.

CHAIRMAN MAO
. . . after he's gone?

And it is estimated this dangerous combination of assets would provoke rapid intervention by a frightened world before hostilities began to hurt.

Happily, Washington plans no assault on China, nor has the Cultural Revolution been prompted by any fear in Peking of such an assault. But America's potential to do China damage is not underestimated there, and an ill-timed "incident" in the frontier area against a China oversensitive about her brittle prestige could detonate a disastrous explosion.

To Chinese, observing the scene through their own rosered spectacles, intervention in Vietnam should not be necessary, however.

The outcry against the war in the United States, the mounting U.S. casualties, the race riots, Washington's despatch of 450,000 men to Vietnam at the cost of an unpopular 10 per cent tax surcharge, when half-a-million more may be needed—all these confirm Chinese Communists in their faith in a long, low-pitched, nagging war, fought by the Vietnamese themselves.

For some, misunderstanding springs from the Communist conviction that Johnson is increasingly flustered by the doves, whereas until now he has, in fact, given way before the more powerful pressure of the hawks without, and their powerful influence within the administration.

Wherever it ranges over the Far East, the dialogue between China and the United States is—similarly and inevitably—a conversation between the deaf.

Ir. the State Department the President's advisers think in terms of a peaceful and strictly neutral Southeast Asia of the future, in which exclusively Asian regional association, discreetly encouraged by Washington, will not only co-ordinate their economies,

SECRETARY RUSK
. . . blocking UN entry

but ultimately their common defence, replacing a SEATO compromisingly dominated by the U.S.

China, it is hoped, would be tempted to conclude specific technical and commercial agreements with countries of the area, and so gradually rejoin the community of nations—an oriental Gulliver tamed by multiplying if slender international ties.

Meanwhile, the first logical step towards normalizing relations between America and China must be to develop trade between the two countries—perhaps indirect trade initially, through Japan.

But the Chinese see the Far East as their traditional sphere of influence, and their twin objectives are to evict the Americans from it and subvert it. They know very well against whom Washington wants a neutral Southeast Asia to defend itself.

For them on the other hand, the only acceptable form of "neutralization" would be one in which neutrality was no more than a stepping stone to Communism. If China wants to develop trade with countries in this subcontinent, it is in order to bind them to her, not be bound by them.

Compromised

Nor could Tokyo be an effective broker between Washington and Peking, for the "reactionary" Japanese have now compromised themselves not only with the United States, but also with Nationalist Formosa.

It is not possible to hope for a grain of sweetness or a glimmer of light in Sino-American relations until the Cultural Revolution is over, and Mao has left the stage. Only then could the wistful American dream begin to become reality—if the United States were also able to drop its championship of Formosa and recognize Peking, and Mr. Rusk could stop announcing that Washington would oppose any move to seat Communist China in the United Nations.

At present, however, the constant danger that mutual misunderstanding will lead to mutual murder is enhanced not only by the malice of the hawks on both sides but by the bewildering conflict of views that rages in both capitals.

Faced—amid the confused babel of the Cultural Revolution—with any exposition of Peking's alleged intentions, a skeptical American may demand: "Which Peking?"

But a Chinese would be equally entitled to ask: "Which Washington?"

(London Observer Service)

Founders Of B.C.

William H. Collision

"You will all be murdered."

That's what William Henry Collison was told when he took his wife and children with him to the Queen Charlotte Islands almost 100 years ago to preach the gospel. But they weren't — and when Collison died in 1922 he had given nearly half a century to his Christian mission.

It was in England in 1872 when he read a newpaper advertisement placed by the Church Missionary Society that he decided as a good Anglican, to become a missionary. He went to missionary college and at prompting of his instructors, he married a deaconess and they left for this untamed land in 1873. They stayed 20 days in Victoria before departing for Metlakahtla on November 1, where Willian Duncan was instructing 450 Indians in the ways of Christianity.

In 1876 Collison decided the Haidas of the Queen Charlotte Islands, the most feared tribe of the coast, were more in need of his ministry. He took his wife and two children despite dire warnings. They had to live with the tribesmen at first in a log hut formerly used for storing furs. Collison spoke no Haida but managed to make himself understood using the Chinook language, the language of the fur trade, and finally was accepted.

He and his family suffered typhoid, he was threatened by sharks and sea lions and killer whales while living the Indian life; but he survived to gain the amiration and finally the allegiance of the Indians. He wrote a book "In the Wake of the War Canoe" which is still exciting reading.

When he died at Kincolith, in his beloved north, in 1922, he was widely mourned. But he had the satisfaction that he was now Archdeacon ... and his son, H. A. Collison was carrying on his chosen work.

Top French Diplomat For Quebec City Post?

By GERALD WARING

OTTAWA — According to private intelligence from Paris, the next step in the Paris-Quebec minuet may be the posting of a high ranking French diplomat to Quebec City.

He will be a "name" appointee, someone of stature so transcending that of the French ambassador to Canada, Francois Leduc. as to trumpet that the French government considers Quebec more important than Canada.

This will further flatter the government at Quebec City, which is already glowing with pride and satisfaction over the fact that President de Gaulle has extended to Quebec the courtesies and considerations customary only in relations between sovereign nations.

It will further irritate the government at Ottawa, which is already fuming at the discourtesies and liberties of the French government in its dealings with Quebec.

If the Quai D'Orsay merely replaces the present French consul general in Quebec City, Robert Picard, then Ottawa could hardly complain no matter how prestigious the new man might be.

However, the temper of the French government since July has been to be bluntly and insultingly undiplomatic towards Ottawa while developing relations with Quebec. French cabinet ministers come and go in Quebec City without even advising Ottawa of their intended visits, much less making courtesy calls on Ottawa.

President de Gaulle brassily offered economic aid to Quebec despite the fact that there is no provision for such aid in the master agreement between Ottawa and Paris for Franco-Quebec co-operation in the fields of education, culture and scientific technology. And in the matter of the proposed Franco-Quebec TV and communications satellite, both Paris and Quebec deliberately ignored the fact that Ottawa has exclusive jurisdiction over broadcasting in Canada.

So it's a good bet that M. Picard will keep his job as consul general — and that the Quai d'Orsay will create a new post at Quebec City in what will amount to the establishment of diplomatic relations with the "state" of Quebec.

Quebec maintains agents-general with offices and staffs in New York, Paris, London and Milan. It used to have one even in Ottawa. Latterly it has taken to describing the Paris office as a delegation-general, as if to upgrade it, and the head of mission as the delegate general. The French government accords him diplomatic status.

Reports from Paris say the French government will set up a reciprocal mission in Quebec City headed by a diplomat accredited only to the Quebec government. He would have the style and rank of minister-in-residence, and not unlikely the personal rank of ambassador.

Prime Minister Pearson said in a recent interview that when France and Quebec treat "as two equal states, then we have the right in Ottawa to be concerned," and that "we can do a good deal about it."

As to just what — well, Ottawa might "express our concern to France . . . in a way which will be effective but not offensive."

Would he turn the blighter out? Not if he wanted to avoid offending Paris and Quebec.

Versatile Fish Adapt To Unusual Habitats

By DR. CLIFFORD CARL
Director, Provincial Museum

Fishes are such versatile creatures that over the long period of their history they have managed to adapt themselves to almost every type of habitate available to them. As a consequence they are found in all the places where one may expect to find them and also in some rather unusual situations where one definitely does not expect to find a fish.

Carl

A few quite unrelated forms have discovered certain advantages in being able to bury themselves and are therefore often found beneath the surface of the bottom material. Our most common example is the abundant sand lance or needle fish which is one of the principle sources of food of coho and chinook salmon, lingcod, rockfish, birds, seals and some whales. Sand lance travel in quite large schools — a habit which provides them with a measure of protection from predators. However, they also have the ability of diving into the sand and coming to rest with only the head showing or burying themselves some distance beneath the surface for a short time where they are almost perfectly safe from pursuit. Their long slender shape presumedly helps make the burrowing process possible but in addition they must have some provision for preventing sand from entering the gill chamber when they are completely covered.

During a very low tide these fish will remain buried in the sand even when the sand is exposed and presumedly they remain covered until the area is flooded again by the incoming tide. However, occasionally on a hot day fish will suddenly appear on the surface where they are soon discovered by a passing gull.

A species with somewhat similar habits is the sandfish found along the coast as far north as Alaska. It is quite different in shape being much flattened from side to side and paddle-like in outline. The mouth is unusual; the jaws are nearly verticle with the opening directed upward and with the lips fringed with a series of finger-like projections. Apparently these modifications keep sand from entering the mouth when the fish lies buried beneath the surface. Because of this burrowing habit the sandfish is seldom taken in a net and consequently it is a novelty when one is accidently captured.

In muddy lagoons and other areas where ghost shrimps are likely to be found another secretive fish with unusual habits is occasionally seen. This is the arrow goby, an alert litle fellow scarcely two inches long which regularly lives in the burrows dug by ghost shrimps. Its slender body and small size enable the fish to inhabit the somewhat cramped quarters excavated by the crustacean and the two residents seem to be unusually tolerant of each other.

★ ★ ★

Another remarkable place to find a fish is attached to a shark or a whale, yet this is where one finds the remora or whale-sucker. The most unusual feature about this fish is the large pleated disk that covers the top of the head and the front portion of the body. This structure, which is really the greatly modified dorsal fin, enables the fish to clamp on to the underside of a shark, porpoise, whale, turtle or even a ship then gives it a free ride. At the same time this association brings the remora into frequent contact with schools of small fishes upon which it feeds.

Vietnam War Rationale Altered by Dean Rusk

By CHALMERS M. ROBERTS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—In a rare emotional moment last Friday morning, Secretary of State Dean Rusk escalated the verbiage of the Vietnam war.

He did so by terming the war a testing ground of Asia's ability to withstand the threat of "a billion Chinese ... armed with nuclear weapons" and by recalling that "World War II hit us from the Pacific."

Rusk was quickly descended upon with charges that he had raised the "Yellow Peril," a charge he indignantly denied.

If ever there was a case of words outrunning facts, this was it. Rusk is no racist. He certainly did not intend to raise the ancient emotional cry of "Yellow Peril," a phrase first used by Kaiser Wilhelm in the days before the Boxer Rebellion and subsequently employed to arouse the American public against the Japanese.

But what counts is not just the facts but what people think are the facts. And in this case that means people and governments abroad as well as the American public.

Far Beyond

Thus what Rusk seemed to be doing was to alter the rationale of American involvement in Vietnam far beyond the initial theme of simply helping the South Vietnamese to have a right to choose their own way of life without outside interference.

His words seemed to imply that the United States was dug in in Vietnam until China changed its evil ways and that could be for decades.

As if to emphasize this escalation, Rusk seemed to sweep aside all the proposals which have been made of late for bringing the war to the negotiating table—bombing pauses, the use of the United Nations, talks with the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front.

In reality, however, Rusk's remarks—and the critical ones were in response to questions, not in his prepared statement—appear to have been precipitated by something entirely different: A growing fear that the American public is going to walk out on the war on the grounds that no real national interest is at stake.

Walking Out

To Rusk that would be walking out at a point where he believes the war is going better and where perseverance is crucial.

So he offered a new justification in terms of the long-range threat from China. Hitherto, the secretary has avoided pinning the war so directly on China, though he has spoken of China's relationship to the war. He avoided this because he knew that to do so would make it more difficult to negotiate a way out.

The cost of raising the ante this way has been to intensify the internal debate and bring down on his head the "Yellow Peril" charge, all as a presidential campaign is getting under way.

The question now is whether Rusk will stick to this new tack, thus in effect making it American policy, or whether he will try to explain it away. To allow the "Yellow Peril" imputation to stand also would exacerbate relations with America's non-Communist and non-white Asian friends and allies.

Since Rusk, although he is the chief official on foreign policy, is responsible to the President, the question arises: Where does Lyndon Johnson stand?

No Abstractions

The President is not an abstract thinker; he dislikes geo-political terms though he has on occasion indulged in some sweeping generalizations about Asia and the war. Rather he is a pragmatist and a politician, seeking, desperately at times it seems, a way out of the Vietnam morass.

Mr. Johnson is certainly not going to repudiate Rusk's remarks; indeed he was pleased by the press conference at first reading. But he has not swept aside, as Rusk seemed to do, the various tactical approaches to negotiation. He makes a point of noting that the man he has in Saigon as his ambassador is Ellsworth Bunker, a man with a reputation as a peacemaker, rather than his hard-line predecessors, Gen. Maxwell Taylor and Henry Cabot Lodge.

The President, like Rusk, accepts the general idea of containment of China. But one has the impression he is prepared to bend it a bit if the opportunity opens up. And if that happens, the betting would be that Rusk would be in on it rather than resigning on principle.

The trouble is that there is no sign of any possible negotiations. The President believes, though others may dispute it, that Ho Chi Minh has never budged an inch.

It is against that dreary prospect for a negotiated settlement that Rusk's words—if they stand and thus become policy—were so important.

CONSUMER BILL LACKS TEETH CHARGES OPPOSITION

'Cuckoo in a Nest' Says Tory

OTTAWA (CP)—The government was accused Wednesday of window dressing and putting another "cuckoo in a nest" with its bill to establish a new department of corporate and consumer affairs.

Erik Nielsen (PC—Yukon) said the bill lacks teeth because there is no provision for federal control of prices.

NDP Leader Douglas joined in the attack, saying the department as proposed would offer little help for the consumer.

The Commons resumed debate on second reading of the bill.

"We have before us a bill embodyig a new department whose functions are already being carried on fairly successfully by other departments," Mr. Nielsen said.

There was no doubt in his mind that co-ordination was necessary "but we do not need this vast structure that the government is attempting to create. . . ."

'CUCKOO IN NEST'

"I like to think of it in terms of another case of a cuckoo in a nest, like the department of industry, which began with a modest budget of $25,000,000 and now runs to $140,000,000," said the Yukon member.

The bill creates a new corporate and consumer affairs department out of the present department of Registrar-General Turner. The department already administers laws on combines, restrictive trade practices, patents and bankruptcy legislation.

Mr. Turner said the government, in proposing the legislation, is "concerned with setting certain ground rules for business activity."

"These are to be tested by the extent to which they encourage maximum efficiency and responsiveness to the needs of the public at large."

Mr. Douglas said Canadian society is "monopoly - dominated" and the government is the consumer's only protection. But there was nothing in Mr. Turner's bill to give the consumer any hope.

The NDP leader contended the government is presenting legislation that pretends to do something but is doing virtually nothing that has not been done before.

The bill was merely gathering together existing legislation—most of which, Mr. Douglas said, is useless and ineffective.

Mr. Nielsen said Mr. Turner is posing as a "white knight riding with lance levelled in aid of consumers."

"A rubber lance," interjected another MP.

Marijuana Sentence Reduced

A 17-year-old Victoria youth has won his appeal against a sentence passed on him last July 13 for being in possession of marijuana.

Martin Baker, of 99 Gorge Road, was sentenced by Judge Montague Drake to six months definite and 12 months indefinite in the Young Offenders' Unit at New Haven.

The B.C. Appeal Court Wednesday reduced the sentence to six months definite, striking out the indefinite sentence.

Chief Justice H. W. Davey said the reduced sentence was justified because two other men received six-month jail terms Tuesday for being in possession of marijuana.

Baker has already served four months and three days of the six-month term.

Lone Seaman Survives Sinking

ESBJERG, Denmark (Reuters) — A Greek seaman picked up from a lifeboat in the gale-swept North Sea told his rescuers Wednesday he believes he is the only survivor from a 3,846-ton freighter that sank Tuesday night.

Rescue vessels today picked up the bodies of 15 crew members of the freighter.

It was the most serious damage at sea so far as hurri the boy went down to damage at sea so far as hurricane - strength storms ripped across northern Europe, taking a heavy toll in life and property.

The seaman, Emanuel The seaman, Emanuel Abdelas, said his ship, the Nagusena, carrying a Greek crew of 20 to 25 men, went down off the Danish coast while carrying a cargo of coal.

The ship was Panamanian-owned and flew the Lebanese flag.

SPOT OIL SLICK

A Danish air force helicopter spotted an air bubble, a big oil slick, and floating wreckage near the spot where the seaman was picked up by a Danish fishing boat about four miles west of Esbjerg.

Across the rest of Northern Europe, at least 11 persons were known dead in the storms.

Top-Secret U.K. Intelligence Chiefs 'Named'

NEW YORK (AP)—The Saturday Evening Post in an article in its Nov. 4 issue publicly reveals for the first time the names of the heads of the two most secret British intelligence agencies.

The article says that DI-6, England's espionage arm, is run by Sir Dick Goldsmith White and that DI-5, the counterintelligence division, is headed by Sir Edward M. Furnival-Jones.

In London, the Daily Express published the names of the two intelligence chiefs despite a voluntary arrangement between publications and the British government to protect national security.

A spokesman for the newspaper, a Lord Beaverbrook daily with a circulation of 4,000,000, said the names were printed because the Post planned to use them in the forthcoming issue.

The Post article is excerpted from the book The Espionage Establishment, by David Wise and Thomas B. Ross. The book will be published by Random House.

The story says that when he was knighted in June, 1967, Jones appeared cryptically on the honors list as "Jones, Edward Martin Furnival, attached ministry of defence."

White was deputy chief of the counterintelligence subdivision of G-2 on the staff of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's Supreme Allied headquarters in the Second World War, the article says.

Elsewhere in the article, the authors say that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency spends $1,500,000,000 a year, "flouts" Congress with a domestic division a block from the White House, and that an agent said it once had a plan to blow off Cuban Premier Fidel Castro's head with an exploding cigar.

They contend the CIA "flouted the intent of Congress" because the lawmakers were assured the agency would not engage in activities in the U.S.

The article says during Castro's visit to the United Nations in New York in 1966 a CIA agent approached Police Chief Inspector Michael J. Murphy with a plan to get Castro to smoke an exploding cigar.

If the CIA was pulling Murphy's leg, the authors commented, "it was a shockingly foolish subject to joke about."

Businessmen Jailed

BERLIN (Reuters)—The East German Supreme Court today sentenced one West German businessman to life imprisonment and another for 15 years for spying. Sentenced to life was 49-year-old Hamburg businessman Herbert Latinsky. The prosecution said he used his position to sabotage East German trade and industry.

Competition For Labor Posts Likely

Election contests for some key positions in the B.C. Federation of Labour are expected at next week's convention in Vancouver.

"It is safe to hazard a guess there will be opposition to the secretary-treasurer and three council officers' positions," said George Kowbel, recording secretary of the Vancouver local, International Woodworkers of America.

He said, "if there is a necessity for someone to oppose the present secretary-treasurer and no one else is available, I would become available if drafted."

Other persons were prepared to stand for the position, he said, but he declined to identify them at this time.

Federation secretary-treasurer Ray Haynes was appointed last year after Pat O'Neal resigned. He defeated Charles Stewart at last fall's convention election by a margin of 65 votes.

Opposition to the present federation leadership will be discussed at a meeting before the convention at which time it is expected that an alternative slate will be prepared.

The federation's handling, or what its critics call mishandling, of the pulp union "bugging" affair and the suspension and reinstatement of four IWA locals are expected to be two issues in the election contests.

Duchess Jailed

MADRID (UPI)—A frail-looking but iron-willed Spanish Duchess was sentenced today to one year imprisonment and fined 10,000 pesetas ($166) for leading an illegal demonstration in the Spanish town where the U.S. air force lost a nuclear bomb.

Czarist Flag Lowered as Alaska Sale Marked

SITKA, Alaska (AP)—The double-eagle flag of Czarist Russia again flew Wednesday over Castle Hill in Sitka, onetime capital of Russian America.

At 3.30 p.m. the six-man color guard of the U.S. Army Ninth Infantry lowered the Russian flag and raised the Stars and Stripes. It was exactly 100 years since members of the same unit hoisted a 37-star American flag to mark the transfer of Alaska from Russia to the United States.

It was Alaska Day, culmination of the year-long celebration of the Alaska purchase centennial.

When Alaska was transferred to the U.S. 100 years ago, the spectators included Prince Dmitrii Maksutov, last governor of Russian America.

Participating in the Wednesday re-enactment was Constantine F. Maxutov of Pleasantville, N.Y., grandson of the prince.

Prince Maksutov had opposed the sale of the territory for $7,200,000 but was overruled by the Czarist court at St. Petersburg.

Joint Economic Board Urged To Handle U.S.-Canada Problems

OTTAWA (CP)—A joint economic commission with the United States and joint U.S.-Canadian consultation on defence and foreign policy were recommended Wednesday by Maxwell Cohen, dean of law at McGill University.

He told the joint banquet of the Society of American Foresters and the Canadian Institute of Forestry that a joint economic commission could deal with the economic problems that cause friction between the two countries, just as the International Joint Commission has been able to deal with problems of boundary waters.

No other two countries in the world had the degree of intimacy that exists between Canada and the U.S., but "no formula has yet been found to assure that there will be no erosion of the Canadian fact."

He told the 1,500 delegates, about three-quarters of them Americans, that Canadian foreign policy has to shake off the image that it is too ready to follow the Washington plan.

But he was quick to criticize anti-Americanism.

200 YEARS OF DECISION

Turning to the internal issue of Canadian unity, Mr. Cohen said French-speaking Canada has made decisions on education, religion, law and family life for 200 years to ensure the survival and fulfillment of French culture in this country.

Now it had discovered that the steps taken to ensure survival did not achieve fulfillment. The present unrest in Quebec was a new search for fulfillment. The result was that English-speaking Canada had been forced to ask itself whether it was prepared to revise Confederation to give Quebec a different status.

"Since we did not have our civil war, we now must have a psychological war. Out of it will come a new kind of Canada."

Isuzu Bellett. The economy car that didn't cut corners to get under $2000.

When it comes to cutting corners, we're square.

That's why the Isuzu Bellett ended up with 4-speed syncro-mesh and a 71 h.p. engine that tops 90 m.p.h. (That's 42% more horsepower and 13% more speed than the biggest-selling economy car.)

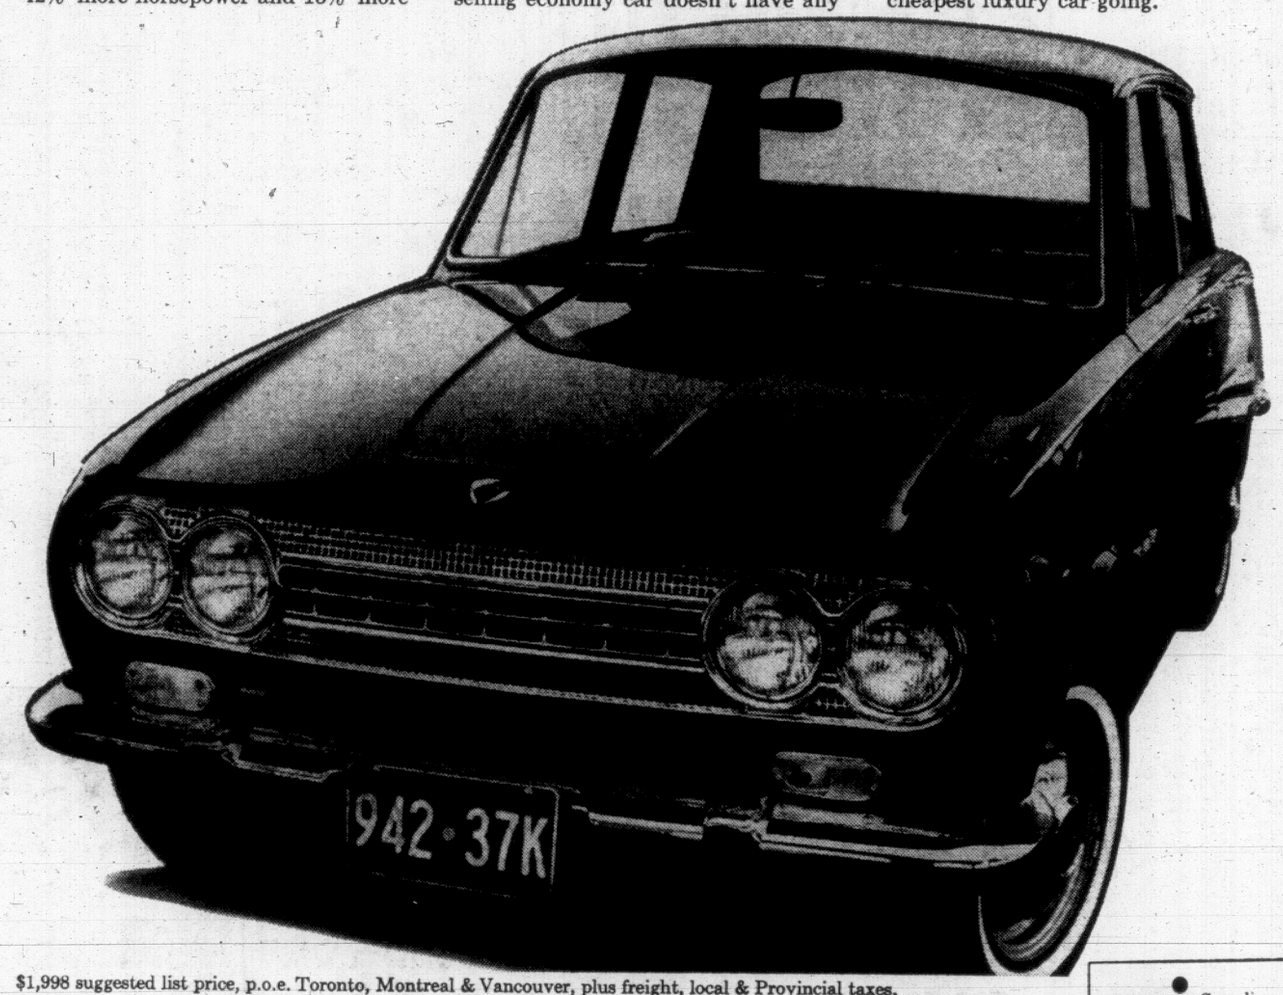
And the Isuzu Bellett ended up with 4 doors and 4 headlights. (That's 100% more doors and 100% more headlights than the biggest-selling economy car.)

And the Isuzu Bellett ended up with an all vinyl interior. Whitewalls. Undercoating. And a locking gas cap. All standard equipment. (The biggest-selling economy car doesn't have any of these features so there's no percentage figuring it out.)

There's one place we're at a standoff with the biggest-selling economy car. We have independent 4-wheel suspension. So do they. We don't mind sharing the glory on this one point.

Of course, we get up to 40 miles to the gallon. That's why we call the Isuzu Bellett an economy car.

Otherwise, it would probably be the cheapest luxury car going.



• $1,998 suggested list price, p.o.e. Toronto, Montreal & Vancouver, plus freight, local & Provincial taxes.

Trust Firms Announce Merger

TORONTO (CP) — Shareholders of Eastern and Chartered Trust Co. and Canada Permanent Trust Co. have approved a merger of the two firms. Eastern and Chartered's name will disappear under the merger, which will give the Canada Permanent Trust Co. assets of about $2,000,000,000, making it Canada's largest trust company in terms of capital.

Officials said it is expected to process about $1,000,000,000 worth of mortgages yearly.

Federal Treasury Board approval is needed for the merger to take effect, but no difficulty in obtaining is expected.

Canada Permanent Trust is owned by Canada Permanent Mortgage Corp., which will buy the shares of the new company on the basis of three Mortgage Corp. shares for one Trust company share.

U.S. Gov't Attacks Bills To Impose Import Curbs

WASHINGTON (CP)—Retaliation is inevitable from major U.S. trading partners if Congress approves import restrictions on a broad range of items, senior government spokesmen warned Wednesday.

"Many foreign governments would be likely to make it as painful as possible for us, hoping thereby to bring us to our senses as they see it," State Secretary Dean Rusk told the Senate finance committee.

Prospects "would be nothing short of appalling" if curbs were legislated affecting an estimated $6.3 billion of the U.S. import bill, which totals more than $25 billion.

Flanked by three cabinet colleagues, Rusk led a government counter-attack against assorted bills proposing import quotas on items as diverse as lead and zinc, strawberries and mink pelts.

"A number of our trading partners, with all of whom we have the closest political ties, have already submitted formal diplomatic notes . . . expressing their very great concern," Rusk testified.

Canada's note was presented Tuesday, following those from Japan, the European Common Market Latin America and elsewhere.

But Louisiana Democrat Russell Long, committee chairman, said, "It is time someone began to show a little concern for our own people."

He supported freer trade but foreign barriers remained against many American exports. Domestic industries were beirg harmed by imports and unless some U.S. action was taken "we are going to become patsies to the rest of the world."

Republican Senator Wallace Bennett of Utah said Rusk and his colleagues had waved "every old bogey" about foreign retaliations. Democratic Senator Vance Hartke of Indiana said the 11 million tons of steel now imported, largely from Japan, represents the export of 83,000 American jobs.

The committee hearings scheduled for three days opened to standing room only crowds.

Interior Secretary Stewart Udall said he opposes the proposed re-establishment of quotas on lead and zinc. These were removed two years ago and Canada last year sold about $94 million worth of the metals to the U.S.

He also opposes bills by Senator Long and others to clamp a firm legislative ceiling on crude oil imports. Canada's steadily-rising exports were valued at about $825 million last year.

Udall said coal exports would suffer if crude oil is cut back. He defended the existing oil import control program as flexible and yet firm enough to have kept imports of cheaper foreign crudes to just about the target level of 12.2 per cent of estimated U.S. production east of the Rocky Mountains.

Union Miniere Team in Province

Premier Bennett Wednesday revealed that a team of Union Miniere officials is touring B.C. looking for major project investment opportunities.

Union Miniere is a major international firm, controlled by the Belgian Royal family, which virtually ran the Belgian Congo before it gained independence and still has major uranium mines in Katanga province.

However, Mr. Bennett refused to say who or where the visiting officials are "so the press won't hound them."

FUNDS BEING SHIFTED 'TO SAFER HAVENS'

TORONTO (CP)—The president of the Royal Trust Co. said Wednesday some of his firm's customers have been shifting money from Quebec to what was described as "safer havens".

But Conrad F. Harrington was not alarmed.

He told a meeting of the Toronto Society of Financial Analysts that customers were free to control their own accounts.

Expansion Need At City Docks

By AB KENT
Business Editor

Changing shipping techniques and a slump in the export lumber and plywood market are causing some concern for Ogden Point deep-sea terminal traffic.

Since the spring, Victoria shipping statistics have faded, although at the beginning of 1967 the totals for lumber and plywood were encouragingly high.

Kent

They reflected a catching up in last winter's loss of U.S. and U.K. markets due to a construction recession brought on by tight money.

In the summer and fall logging was brought to a standstill along the coast due to one of the worst fire seasons in B.C. history. This made the supply of lumber to meet demands rather less than usual for the time of year.

But as King Bros. Ltd. shipping agent George Dawson points out, lumber manufacturers are using new shipping methods, which if carried on will mean the certain death of Ogden Point as a lumber export terminal.

"Ships used to visit six or seven B.C. ports per voyage, collecting a full cargo before putting to sea. They would travel many miles before they got going, and this was expensive and cost time," Mr. Dawson said.

"Today, more companies are assembling full cargoes themselves, meaning fewer ports of call for each freighter coming to B.C."

Cowichan Bay has the nearest of these large assembly areas and expansion is planned. Another assembly wharf at Crofton is already expanding. Nanaimo had the first major lumber assembly wharf on Vancouver Island's east coast.

★ ★ ★

Victoria, by contrast, has scant space for assembly purposes, crowding packaged lumber into the confines of foreshore and rail yard in a narrow area between Dallas Road and the Outer Wharves.

Mr. Dawson says Ogden Point must have a larger assembly area if it is to survive in the export trade; docks need lengthening and berths need dredging to accommodate the larger and larger ships that make Victoria a port of call.

Some of the local mills are already finding it advantageous to haul lumber up-island, by truck and by scow, to the large assembly areas mentioned.

Ogden Point berths provide a maximum draft of 32 feet when ships are commonly topping off cargoes elsewhere at 34 to 36 feet draft. The docks themselves might be extended 200 feet to make more room for the vessels, Mr. Dawson suggested.

★ ★ ★

"They keep waiting until business goes somewhere else," he complained about the apparent lack of concern and action. City council should be taking the question up, he felt.

Yet, as long as ships do come here, Ogden Point enjoys a reputation for speed and efficiency in longshoring, despite the absence of modern methods and equipment for handling cargo.

On Wednesday gangs loaded 1.01 million board feet of lumber in a single daylight stretch, earning the praise of the ship's master.

Some people, like contractor George Farmer, are aware that Ogden Point lives only because of its lumber export business, even though grain shipments to the Orient and Russia in recent years have been of some importance.

Mr. Farmer, who is chairman of Victoria Chamber of Commerce harbor and transportation group, has called a meeting to discuss the Ogden Point situation next Tuesday.

He said he hopes to take a delegation to Vancouver for discussion with Canadian National Railways, operator of the docks and storage area.

"The whole emphasis today is toward transportation," he said. "The crux is speed in materials handling and the trend is toward containers. Certain ports, like Victoria, are going to have to smarten up."

★ ★ ★

September lumber shipments from Ogden Point docks fell by more than 1 million board feet compared with September a year ago. The totals with comparisons were:

Lumber 11.555 million board feet (12.588 million board feet); plywood 54 tons (974 tons); outgoing general cargo four tons (none a year ago); incoming general cargo, 1,982 tons (1,180 tons).

At Cowichan Bay: Lumber 2.779 million board feet (9.782 board feet); plywood 124 tons (406 tons); pulp, none last month (788 tons); shingles 22 tons (none last year).

Charter Oil Wins Court Appeal

VANCOUVER (CP) — Charter Oil Co. Ltd. and Jacques Beique, a director, Wednesday won an appeal in an action to prevent a new group of directors from taking over control of the company.

The British Columbia Court of Appeal, in an unanimous finding by three judges, upheld a motion by Charter and Mr. Beique for a court order enjoining the defendants from taking any steps to implement a resolution of shareholders which increased the authorized number of directors and appointed certain persons to fill the positions created.

Earlier the request for an injunction had been dismissed by the B.C. Supreme Court.

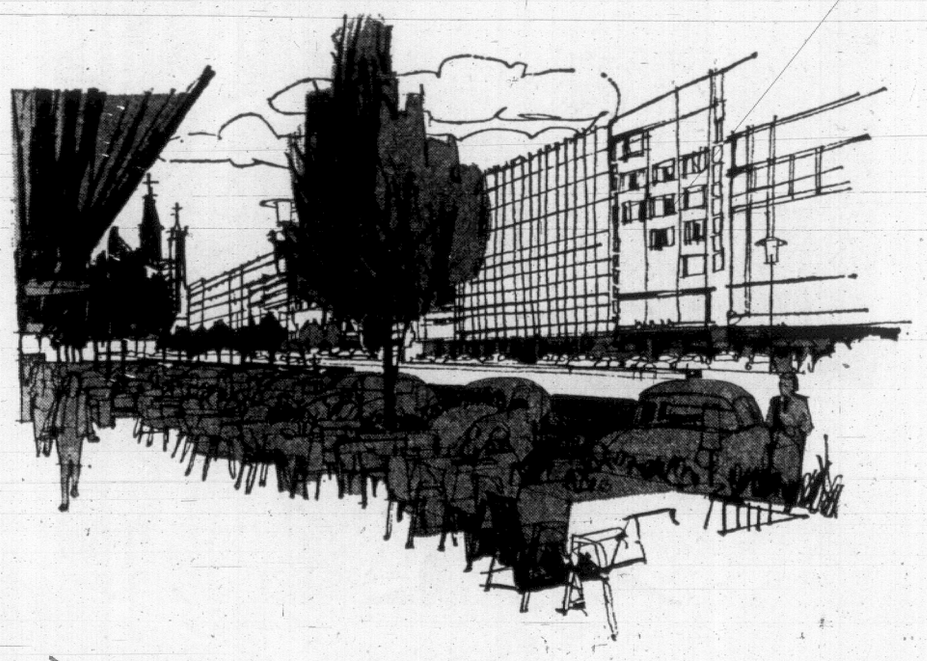
What's a company like Cominco doing in a place like Düsseldorf?



Opening up new markets in Western Europe for the sale of Cominco metals — metals mined and processed in British Columbia. That's what Cominco is doing in Dusseldorf, West Germany. Just as it is doing elsewhere — in the United States, Britain, Africa, Japan, India and South-East Asia.

The reason for this is simple. Today Cominco's metal output in British Columbia is at near record levels. We make far more than British Columbia or even all of Canada can use. So Cominco must go world-wide to market its B.C. products.

Developing foreign markets for Cominco products means more trade and revenue for British Columbia today; even more in the future.

Gov't Aid Suggested For Papers

LONDON (CP)—Britain's prices and income board said today financial troubles threaten to reduce the number of national dailies and suggested to the government it might eventually step in with help for the newspaper industry.

The board said the distressed papers should first do all they can to cut costs. They had not done this up to now.

In a report to thegovernment on the economic situation of the eight national papers with the largest circulations, the board said that in 1966 three of them made an aggregate £8,388,000 ($25,164,000) while five of them lost £4,329,000 ($12,987,000). It did not name those in either category.

LACKS TV KNOWHOW

It blamed the plight of the losers on a combination of tough competition, over-manning and failure to keep abreast of commercial television methods in getting advertising revenue.

A recent prediction—that of The Economist intelligence unit in a report last January to the joint board of the national newspaper industry—forecast the end of one "quality" and two "popular" papers within five years if the present cost structure remains unchanged.

The price-income board's report today resulted from a reference given it by the government when the mass-appeal Mirror—largest and among the financially strongest of the dailies—gave notice of a one-penny increase to fivepence in its sale price three months ago.

FREEZES INCREASE

The government held up the increase under its price-restraint powers pending a general survey by the board, which recommend against it. However, The Mirror can put it into effect in another three months should the government now oppose it.

The board found The Mirror has room for cutting its manpower costs by 25 to 30 per cent and said that in any case a price increase by it might have adverse repercussions on other papers.

The problem had to be tackled urgently and systematically by the publishers and their trade unions, and it was their responsibility to deal with displacement of employees.

RANGE OF 120 MILES FOR G-E ELECTRIC CAR

DETROIT — General Electric has revealed details of an experimental electric car with a top speed of 55 m.p.h. and a range of up to 120 miles at a normal curising speed.

But the corporation reaffirmed there are no plans to produce its "research vehicle."

The vehicle is designed to carry two adults and two children. It has three doors and a fiberglas body on a magnesium frame. The energy source is a combination of special lead-acid and nickel-cadmium batteries. Recharging time using an on-board charge, plugged into a typical household circuit is eight to 10 hours. The car weighs about 2,300 pounds.

BRITAIN BOOSTS INTEREST RATE

LONDON (Reuters)—The Bank of England interest rate was raised today by one-half per cent to six per cent.

The bank rate—the key to interest levels in the money market—had until today been at 5½ per cent since May 4 when the government clipped a half per cent off the previous six per cent after a year of economic austerity.

James Callaghan, chancellor of the exchequer, may have been reluctant to raise it today because he has long advocated lower interest rates.

He has acted to bolster sterling and cut the flow of funds from London.

A THINNING TRADE

The most recent threat to sterling has been the dislocation of Britain's trade caused by strikes in the ports of London and Liverpool.

This has caused havoc to Britain's overseas balance of payments.

It is estimated that exports which should be earning more than £100,000,000 ($300,000,000) are piled up on strike-bound ships and dock warehouses.

Productivity is also beginning to suffer as raw materials from overseas become scarce, notably in the textile industry, which relies heavily on imported cotton.

The dock strike is the latest development leading to increased pressure on Britain's currency and affected the balance-of-payments position.

First came increased shipping costs because of closure of the Suez Canal during the June Mideast war; then a succession of higher interest rates by overseas banks, which attracted money from the London market.

Sterling's equivalent U.S. dollar rate was down to $2.7830 today.

Labor Pacts, Gov't Policy Hit at Productivity Seminar

Gains from improved productivity are being taken away from Canadian industries despite rapid growth in the economy, John Wallace, general manager of Yarrows Ltd. in Victoria told a seminar on productivity improvement Wednesday.

In a pointed attack on what he called "restrictive" labor agreements and government policy, Mr. Wallace declared that nothing is being done to improve the lot of industry, "while business is trying to overcome public opinion."

He called on management to become more vocal in its attempts to streamline plant production. Such changes affect the entire economy and management must explain its plight to the public if it is going to get more support, he said.

Productivity improvement is not a way of life in Canada, as it is in some other countries — any attempts to make plant operations more efficient are considered attempts to reduce the work force, Mr. Wallace said.

"I don't suppose there is a labor agreement in British Columbia that allows for a union to work with management to improve productivity," he said.

Labor agreements in recent years have been loaded in favor of the employee, he suggested.

Government has failed to develop a policy about productivity, Mr. Wallace added. Federal labor agreements of up to 40 per cent increases in wages two years ago have "very markedly offset the gains we had made up to that point."

There is probably a great deal of frustration when industries try to make their staff and plants more productive only to have tax assessments go up, "and there isn't a thing you can do about it," he said.

Mr. Wallace's remarks came at the close of a five-hour seminar sponsored by the B.C. division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, provincial department of Industrial Development, Trade and Commerce and the B.C. Research Council.

The information seminar brought 90 participants from Vancouver Island industries for explanations of the purposes and methods of improving productivity. Representatives from firms in Vancouver and Victoria outlined such programs their own companies had implemented.

Mr. Wallace is first vice-chairman of the B.C. division of the CMA.

'Right or Wrong, Obey Injunction'

Validity of Court Order 'Irrelevant' In Union Contempt Case Appeal

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Labour Reporter

A court injunction must be obeyed whether it is right or wrong, the British Columbia Appeal Court was told Wednesday.

"An order of the Supreme Court, however wrong or irregular, still binds and has full force until reversed on appeal," said crown lawyer David Sigler.

"An injunction, however wrong, must be obeyed."

He made the point as the appeal resumed of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and three of its top officials.

The hearing, which continued in Victoria Law Courts building at 11 a.m. today, began last month and lasted four days before adjournment to Wednesday.

The union and president Steve Stavenes, secretary Homer Stevens and business agent Jack Nicol were convicted of criminal contempt of court by Mr. Justice Dohm earlier this year.

The contempt action arose from an injunction issued last March during the Prince Rupert fishing dispute, comments made in two press releases and a union bulletin and a UFAWU membership vote on the injunction.

Fined $25,000 for Contempt

The union was fined $25,000 and the three officials jailed for one year each. The men, all from Vancouver, were later released on bail. The injunction required officials of the union to tell members to fulfil a contract to unload fishing vessels.

Mr. Sigler, answering a defence contention that the order was invalid, said the conviction did not depend on the validity of the March 23 injunction because the law must be obeyed.

Mr. Sigler also dismissed a contention that contempt proceedings cannot be taken against a union as such.

He said in previous cases a union was found to be subject to being sued for damages, a union was liable to prosecution and a union is a statutory entity separate from its members.

He also quoted the well-known 1901 British case of Taff Vale Railway Company and the Amagamated Society of Railway Servants where it was decided that a union could be sued for damages caused by its agents' actions during a strike.

(This decision, however, was reversed by the Trade Disputes Act of 1906, according to Encyclopedia Britannica.)

Court Can Decide on Procedure

Mr. Sigler said the court can decide on procedure and there is "no obligation on the court to proceed otherwise that it sees fit."

On a contention that the UFAWU and its three officials were not told at the outset whether it was criminal or civil contempt and this deprived them of rights under the Criminal Code and Bill of Rights, he said a judge can only rule on this after hearing the evidence.

"There is authority in the Poje case that the court may take proceedings ... whether it be contempt of criminal or civil nature," he said.

"When the matter comes to be heard the judge is not in a position to rule until all the evidence is in.

"I submit Mr. Justice Dohm was justified, when called on to state whether it was criminal or civil, when he said he wouldn't rule at that time. But at judgment he ruled it was contempt criminal in nature."

On a contention that the equality before the law under the Bill of Rights, he said this federal law is "not applicable to alter established procedure of the Supreme Court."

Union Took Vote Instead

The Supreme Court was justified in "bringing the appellants up short" by summary proceedings. Where litigation was pending and where there was contempt "of this nature" the court was not only right in exercising its jurisdiction but "it should do so."

Instead of obeying the injunction, a union membership vote was initiated and comments made in press releases which "obstructed the order of the court. There was an obstruction—a challenge to the court and that is what is inherent in their action."

One press release, said Mr. Sigler, said union members prefer not to handle unfair cargoes and union members will not help break strikes.

"Judge or no judge, these are the facts," he quoted the release.

The general executive board of the UFAWU was called into emergency session and decided only the union as a whole could decide if a union officer could send a telegram on behalf of the union.

No one officer could be considered the union. The executive did not recommend which way members should vote in a secret ballot.

The question posed was whether a telegram should be sent to Prince Rupert saying that by order of the Supreme Court permission is granted by the UFAWU to land fish from five boats "and such operations are to be carried out forthwith."

The appeal, being heard by three judges, is on both the contempt conviction and the sentences. Presentations so far have been only on the conviction and submissions on the sentences will follow.

SHINGLE WORKERS SET FOR LONG STRIKE . . . IF

Twenty shingle workers are prepared for "a long strike if necessary" but are ready to meet mill management for an early settlement, union business agent Bruce Robertson said Wednesday night.

He told the Victoria Labour Council that Local 2802 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters was certified earlier this year but agreed to defer negotiations until the McCarter Shingle and Shake mill came into operation.

Talks started in July but they dragged on and the employees decided to legally strike the mill Monday because negotiations showed "insufficient progress".

He noted that the price and demand for shingles and shakes lag at this time of the year.

The Shingle Weavers Union has said it is seeking wages and conditions similar to other mills in this industry.

A company statement said the union is threatening the future of the new mill by "demanding concessions higher than those that exist in the rest of the industry."

DOES CENTRAL SAANICH WANT LIQUOR STORE?

Does Central Saanich want a liquor store?

This question will be raised at council's next meeting.

Coun. Philip Benn at Monday's meeting suggested that a store be established somewhere in the municipality.

"I have had lots of requests for a store," he said. "Some people have to drive as far as 10 miles to get to a store. I don't think this is right."

Council asked him to obtain information from the attorney-general's department on the procedure for applying for a store.

A year ago, a request was made from some residents for the establishment of a store at Brentwood.

CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS DRIVE

Unions to Make New Housing Crisis Effort

Trade unions across Canada will make a second concerted drive to bring home the problem of the housing crisis.

Victoria Labour Council was informed of this Wednesday night when a letter was read from the Canadian Labour Congress.

Every February the CLC sets a topic for its Citizenship Month. Last February's topic was housing and this will be repeated next February because there is "no alleviation of the housing crisis."

The labor council endorsed this and will invite city planner Geoff Greenhalgh to address a future meeting.

One delegate suggested a forum be held next February to which a variety of persons would be invited "so we can dig into the crisis in housing with the community invited.

"If we don't get interested in housing pretty soon the situation will go down the drain," said Neil Hindle of the boilermakers union.

Another delegage warned the day may be over when young married couples buy houses. The future could be living in multiple dwellings, he said.

In other business, delegates:

Approved an approach to MPs urging that new broadcasting regulations encourage Canadian talent and more Canadian programming and that a CBC outlet be established in Victoria;

● Supported 20 single workers on strike against McCarter Shingle and Shake at the Lime Bay mill in Victoria West;

● Endorsed secretary Larry Ryan's comments about Red Cross blood donors, reported in Wednesday's Victoria Times, that labor donates its fair share to the drives.

Burns Unit Fund Gets Labor Boost

The fund drive for a special unit to treat persons with severe burns picked up $475 Wednesday night.

At a meeting of the Victoria Labour Council, delegates agreed to a $200 donation to the unit which is the Centennial project of the council.

The unit, to be located in St. Joseph's Hospital, will be named after the late A. W. Toone, former mayor of Victoria and secretary of the labor council.

The carpenters' union, building trades council and several business agents donated $250 and Victoria meat cutters contributed $25.

The meeting was told by hospital assistant administrator Pat Blewett that $57,000 needs to be raised locally for the five-bed unit to be built.

TOTAL COST

Total cost is $156,000 and the hospital already has $99,400.

Money available comprises federal and provincial grants, $20,000 from the city of Victoria, $1,000 from trade unions and $1,000 from one contractor.

Mr. Blewett said the Victoria branch of the Amalgamatad Construction Association is meeting this week to make the burns unit a "major project" for the rest of this year.

He said a study two years ago showed hospitals here treat 200 patients a year with severe burns but there were no adequate facilities for looking after them.

Plastic surgeon Dr. Paul Gareau said the idea of the burns unit arose from the fact he was treating many burned patients and he was not satisfied they were getting the best care facilities.

A survey showed patients were staying in hospital too long.

Special facilities were required to control air flow and control bacteria in the air. Patients with severe burns were "particularly susceptible" to infection. Separate air flow was "extremely expensive."

Convicted of Arson

CHATHAM, Ont. (CP) — Stephen Vincent Berger, a 43-year-old Chatham tobacconist and rare coin specialist, was convicted Tuesday of arson in connection with a $200,000 fire that destroyed one of the city's main street business blocks Aug. 18.

Mr. Justice E. A. Richardson said he feared from the evidence that Berger's mind had been damaged by alcohol.

His secret gin recipe isn't a secret anymore.

In 1769, a Highland Scot named Alexander Gordon arrived in London. And started, of all things, a gin distillery.

Soon, Mr. Gordon was making the finest gin the English had ever tasted.

From a secret recipe known only to him. (And later, only to his descendants.)

Now, 200 years later, Gordon's Gin is still made exactly the same.

Only now, it's the largest selling gin in the world. Made in nine countries, including Canada.

To make sure its wonderful taste never varied from place to place, however, we had to let nine other people in on the secret.

We hope you won't hold it against us.

After all, Alexander Gordon didn't keep his secret either.

Seattle Awarded Big League Berth

CHICAGO (AP)—The American League approved Wednesday night transfer of Kansas City Athletics to Oakland, Calif., effective next year, and adopted an expansion plan aimed at increasing membership to 12 clubs by 1969, with new franchises going to Kansas City and Seattle.

At a post-midnight meeting, convened after the Kansas City delegation objected strongly to prospects of a 1971 target for expansion, the AL owners agreed to push for the addition of the two new franchises as early as 1969.

Charles O. Finley received the necessary votes—reportedly 7-3—to move the Athletics to Oakland.

In the case of Seattle, its franchise is contingent on the city passing a $40,000,000 bond issue in February for a multiple-purpose domed stadium.

Kansas City last spring approved a bond issue for a $43,000,00 sports complex that would be ready in 1971. Meanwhile, major league baseball could be played in the Athletics' home stadium

RESENT DEPARTURE

Kansas City's delegation was so angered that the city faced prospects of waiting as long as 1971 without baseball that league president Joe Cronin reconvened the owners past midnight and hammered out appeasement on expansion by 1969.

This came after one Kansas Citian fumed that the league "has rewarded the man who sabotaged baseball in Kansas City and has left the city without baseball until 1971."

Seattle said it also prefers the 1969 target date.

One source said the vote taken was on a package deal that included Finley's shift to Oakland as well as the expansion plans.

"All I wanted was to get six votes to go with mine and I did," smiled Finley. "I will name my new manager this weekend in Oakland. He already has been selected. I'm going to ship the Athletics' mascot—Charlie O., the mule—out there."

Finley fired Al Dark as manager during the season.

Whether Finley would have received the required votes to make the move if this alone were asked is conjectural. Combining it with expansion apparently keyed the voting. Sources said the three clubs voting against it were Baltimore Orioles, Cleveland Indians and Washington Senators.

Hal Malone LOOKS AT SPORTS

What's going to happen at Sandown Park, palace of pleasure, casino of chance, haven for hungry horse-players?

(Palace of pleasure? No racetrack merits that description when the animals of your choice amble at a leisurely pace, race after race. Add Sandown's other "comforts" of rain, wind, parking lot that could pass for the Sea of Gallilee, no bar to soothe the nerves and you don't exactly have Santa Anita).

For nine years punters have attacked Sandown's mutuel machines with increasing faith, ardor and money. They often asked discomforting (to the B.C. Jockey Club) questions. Such as: How about more racing days? A new grandstand?

(They should have saved their breath or sought something practical—more winners.)

The Jockey Club's answer rarely varied: Show us how to make a profit and we'll turn on our hearing aid.

●

Sandown's success in the fall is predicated on one factor: weather.

This year with warm sunshine and somnolent breezes for 10 days, plus excellent racing (can you recall a year when there were more photo finishes?) the handle was up $90,000.

The somebody pulled the plug and the profits ran down the drain. So did nearly everything else—punters, ponies and automobiles.

People will bet on "off" tracks (they do upset handicapping) but only as long as the horses are taking the wash and they are dry.

Charleston, West Virginia, runs a meet in December and January. The horses run in snow, sleet, hail and monsoon. But the bettors relax in a glass-enclosed, heated grandstand, their hands warm enough to peel off money to make a wager.

Now Jockey Club officials, October rain spilling out of their ears, want to switch to a spring meet.

In some quarters the announcement was greeted with less than wild enthusiasm. The dissenters said the betting dropped because of the unusual, prolonged rain. (Is rain in Lotusland THAT unusual?).

Put up a new grandstand, they said, and you'll make a million. They were eager to spend money as long as it was the Jockey Club's money.

●

This week Merv Peters, the Jockey Club's youthful director of racing, made it clear that his employers weren't "testing the wind" with the spring meet idea.

"It has been proven over the years," Peters was saying, "that a fall meet has not progressed to where we could undertake major changes at Sandown." Wiping raindrops off his nose . . . "The possibility of going over 18 days in the fall is non-existent."

Peters is not opposed to autumn gambling. But in a sport where fortunes fall or rise on a flighty barometer he would rather take his chances at Exhibition Park where the bettor can languish in the comfort of a $2.3 million grandstand.

He further believes that Sandown has a "better shot" in the spring because Vancouver money would be fresh after a winter layoff.

"Vancouver bettors are fatigued after five months—it's pretty difficult to expect them to fight the elements and the conditions at Sandown after that."

Better horses and better jockeys would be more prevalent in his view.

"In effect we would be paying horsemen to get their stock in shape. They open training Jan. 1; there's no reason they couldn't race for pots if we ran at Sandown early in April."

●

To satisfy horsemen, the Jockey Club would not count Sandown victories at Exhibition Park except for maidens. At first reasonably pleased with the switch, horsemen swung slightly away from that position.

"You can't run a horse as often in the spring as you can in the fall," one owner said. "Not unless you're crazy. Where are they going to get the horses?"

Sandown has accommodation for 320 head. Peters says: "We'll van others from Vancouver. There are 300 in training at Lansdowne in the spring."

"If they do that," said one horseman, "the ferry ride will be the wildest thing since the Volga boat run. Mares and fillies are so sharp in the spring you can hardly live with them in a box stall. On a ferry . . ." his eyebrows raised.

Like any horse at Sandown with Basil Frazier aboard, the Jockey Club has a sizeable edge when the cards go on the table.

In the spring nearly every horseman is short in the wallet. He can't wait to get his hands on a purse, the best salve for a long winter's feed bill.

When the Jockey Club and the horsemen sit down this month to discuss the switch, you can bet a little that management will lean heavily on the slogan, "Shop early for money."

JACKIE SPEAKS

'Wait A Goldarn Minute'

WINNIPEG (CP)—Coach Jackie McLeod of Canada's national hockey team said Wednesday his players were not the culprits in two incidents during a pre-Olympic tournament in Grenoble, France, last week.

In an interview, McLeod took exception to a Canadian Press story which described a so-called free-for-all in the second period of the final match between Canada and Moscow Dynamos. The Soviet team won the game 3-0 and captured the four-team tournament with three straight victories.

SCUFFLE AT CENTRE

The story said the violent, stick-swinging scuffle occurred when Ted Hargreaves, a native of Weyburn, Sask., charged the Russian goalkeeper during a Canadian attack and Russian team-mates hurried to their goalie's defence.

What actually happened, McLeod said, was that Dynamo captain Vitaly Davidov cross-checked Canadian defenceman Terry O'Malley at centre ice. O'Malley in turn pushed Davidov into the boards, attracting several Russian players and Hargreaves to the scene. At this point, McLeod said, the Russian goaltender skated to centre ice and struck Hargreaves on the back of the neck with his stick. Russian and Canadian players left their bench to engage in a brief shoving match.

McLeod also differed with the description of an incident during the Canada-United States game, which the Americans won 5-4.

REPORT ERRED

The report from Grenoble was that play was stopped for five minutes at one point when O'Malley got in a fight with the American goaltender.

There was a play stoppage, McLeod said, but it came after Canadian goaltender Bobby Taylor was checked into the boards by a United States player and knocked unconscious in the third period. Taylor had to leave the game.

To back his contention that his players were not responsible for the rough stuff, McLeod noted that Canada collected 14 penalties during its three games while opposing teams received 21.

Blaster's Backache Jolts British Hopes

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP)—Britain's hopes of wresting the Ryder Cup from America's million-dollar professional golf team suffered a setback today when Welshman Dave Thomas turned up with a nagging back ailment.

"I am distressed, to say the least," Dai Rees, the Welsh captain of the British team said. "If Thomas is unable to play, we will be severely handicapped."

Thomas is a 6-2, 215-pound giant who is one of the best drivers in the world.

His long, straight blasts off the tee figured to be a major asset for the invaders, particularly in the foursome matches which opens the 17th biennial matches over the Champions Club Friday.

Eight 18-hole foursome matches will be played Friday, with eight four-ball team matches Saturday and eight singles duels Sunday, each victory counting one point.

The United States' team, headed by Arnold Palmer, Bill Casper and Julius Boros, is heavily favored to maintain a 40-year dominance. The Americans have lost only three times while winning 13 and have never been beaten on a U.S. course.

Thomas' injury — restricting his swing—is particularly tough on the Britons because another member of the team, the veteran Christy O'Connor of Ireland, also has been struck by an old ailment—a sore left shoulder.

ANDY HEBENTON
. . . phenomenal career

HEBENTON'S STREAK ENDS . . . . . . UPON DEATH OF FATHER

SAD MOMENT IN SPORTS . . .

An endurance record that couldn't be stopped by the whirling, slashing, bone-jarring game of hockey ended for Andy Hebenton Wednesday with the death of his father.

No athlete in amateur or professional sport could match Alexander Andrew Hebenton's record. Over 15 years he played in 1,062 consecutive games in the National and Western Hockey Leagues.

Often weary, sometimes weakened by colds, once needing drops to open an eye closed by an errant stick, Hebenton always made the trip. They didn't give him the title of "iron Man."

He deserved it, every gruelling minute of the way.

The said he couldn't skate which in the argot of hockey means he lacked a natural grace. But they never said anything about the size of his heart. In goal-front melees or in corners where the faint-hearted don't tread, the Victoria resident has always been militant and prominent, doing his share and more.

Former coach Frank Mario of Victoria Maple Leafs paid him the ultimate tribute after Hebenton had played his 1,000th game last year.

"Andy seems never to have lost his hockey enthusiasm—he's still like a rookie who never gets enough ice time. He's on skates for all practices. In games he takes his regular turn, kills penalties and works the power play. This vigorous approach to the game undoubtedly has kept him younger than his age as a player."

His age is 38. His record is phenomenal.

But sometimes you put personal ambitions aside, Andy Hebenton did Wednesday. His team, Portland Buckaroos, had an engagement with Seattle Totems. They tied 4-4.

But as much as a record meant it didn't mean more to Andy Hebenton than the death of his father. He left for Winnipeg just before the game to attend the funeral.

. . . TO PROVE THEY'RE BEST?

Members of Oak Bay's unbeaten high school girls' field hockey team show off Island championship trophy but say they don't intend to relinquish silverware. Defending champion Oak Bay will be one of 10 teams competing for Island title in Saturday tournament at Lansdowne Junior High. Sparkplugs for Oak Bay this season include (from left to right): left wing Colleen Davies, fullback Anne MacMillan, captain Lynette Goff, and Val Smith, the team's leading scorer. Saturday's tournament gets under way at 10 a.m. and winds up with championship final at 3 p.m. (Times photo by Bill Halkett.)

Andy May Be Old Poke But Not Slow Poke

PITTSBURGH (AP)—When Pittsburgh Penguins grabbed Andy Bathgate in the 17th round of the National Hockey League expansion draft, they hailed him as the best 17th round choice in sports.

He may be.

The Penguins, one of six new NHL teams, have scored nine goals in four games and Bathgate has five of them, including all three in Wednesday night's 3-3 tie with Minnesota North Stars.

It was the sixth time in a brilliant career that the 35-year-old Bathgate collected three goals in a game, but he couldn't remember when the fifth time was.

"I guess it was about seven years ago, back when I used to be able to skate a little bit," Bathgate, the ninth leading all time goal scorer, said. "It's about time."

Bathgate, who has scored 319 NHL goals, said he seriously considered retiring last season when he shuttled between Detroit Red Wings and the minor leagues. But when he was drafted by the Penguins, whose coach Red Sullivan was a New York Ranger team-mate of Bathgate, he decided to stick around.

"I don't know if I would have gone anywhere else," Bathgate said. "I wasn't surprised when Pittsburgh drafted me, though, because I played with Red and he coached me in New York, and he knew what I went through the last few years."

'STILL GOT BRAINS'

What Bathgate went through was a shift from his normal right wing position to centre and left wing at Toronto and Detroit for 3 years.

"He may not be skating the way he was four or five years ago, but he's still got the brains . . . and the shot," Sulivan said.

He reunited Bathgate with Earl Ingarfield, the centre on Bathgate's line in 1958-59 when he won the NHL's Most Valuable Player Award.

In other NHL play Wednesday night, as all 12 teams saw action, three former Chicago players who went to the Boston Bruins last summer in a trade contributed to Boston's 7-1 shellacking of the Black Hawks, defending league champions.

STANFIELD FIRES TWO

Fred Stanfield, who got two goals for Boston, scored one on a rebound from a Phil Esposito shot. Ken Hodge, Don Awrey, Johnny Bucyk, Bobby Orr and Eddie Shack also scored for Boston.

Stanfield, Hodge and Esposito all went to the Bruins from Chicago in the trade for Pit Martin, defenceman Gilles Marotte and goalie Jack Norris.

Bobby Hull scored Chicago's goal—his fourth of the year.

Detroit Red Wings shaded Toronto Maple Leafs 3-2, Montreal Canadiens and New York Rangers played to a 2-2 tie, Philadelphia Flyers beat St. Louis Blues 2-1 and California Seals and Los Angeles played to a 2-2 tie.

The Wings handed the Maple Leafs their first loss in three games.

At New York, Phil Goyette's goal with 2½ minutes to play gave the Rangers the tie before a record home-opener crowd announced at 15,925. It was Goyette's second goal of the night.

Defeated Ramblers Swinging in Front

Although they were upset 16-14 by Victoria Steelers last Saturday at Royal Athletic Park, Orange County Ramblers continue to hold down top berths in individual departments of the Continental Football League's Western Division.

John Seedborg, kicking ace of the Anaheim club, contributed only two extra points against the Steelers but he still has a comfortable lead in the scoring race.

Seedborg has accumulated 55 points on 25 conversions and 10 field goals to lead San Jose kicker Dick Tately by 13 points. Seedborg also has the top punting mark, averaging 39.3 yards in 29 punts. Victoria's Dick Zampese is fourth on the list with a 38.3 mark.

PASSING LEADER

Orange County quarterback Jerry Otterson was replaced in the first quarter Saturday by newcomer Dave Matheson but he still paces the passers with 1,035 yards gained and 13 touchdown tosses. Otterson has connected on 69 of 126 passes for 54.8 completion average and yielded the league high of seven interceptions.

Steelers and Seattle Rangers are idle this weekend while the Apaches of San Jose, who went into first place last weekend by clipping Eugene 23-21, play the Bombers at Eugene and the Ramblers host Sacramento Buccaneers at Anaheim.

Steelers are scheduled to play their next home game on Nov. 4 against San Jose.

Scoring leaders:

Lions Still Snarl

OTTAWA (CP)—Ottawa Rough Riders are back in a tie with Hamilton Tiger-Cats for first place in the Eastern Football Conference but it took Don Sutherin's late-game kicking to put them there.

The Riders, looking for an easy win over British Columbia Lions in Wednesday night's Canadian Football League interlocking game, found the last-place Western Conference club still had some teeth left and they barely escaped with a 19-16 decision.

"It's tough to keep the boys on edge after a long layoff," Rider coach Frank Clair said after his club's first game since Oct. 9.

"Now, we have the opposite problem," he added, in reference to next Sunday's game in Toronto against the resurgent Argonauts.

But Clair got no sympathy from the Lions, who still were licking their wounds from their 22-17 loss in Hamilton Sunday.

FALONEY SHARP

Veteran quarterback Bernie Faloney, operating primarily out of a shotgun formation, tried to get around this problem with pinpoint passing, despite a steady rain that made the field a giant mud puddle surrounded by a green swamp.

Faloney almost succeeded, combining with halfback Jim Young to stake the Lions to a 9-0 lead early in the second quarter and a 16-13 margin early in the third.

But the Riders managed to recover both times, striking for two fast touchdowns late in the second quarter to take a 13-9 half-time lead and two second-half field goals by Sutherin to take the victory. Sutherin's winning kick came with less than two minutes remaining in the game.

Faloney completed 17 of 30 passes for 244 yards. He hit Young seven times for a total of 109 yards and two touchdowns.

The first, early in the second quarter, covered 71 yards when Young got in behind the Ottawa pass defence and had a clear run to the end zone.

The second was a short toss into the end zone from the Ottawa five-yard line.

Quarterback Russ Jackson of Ottawa, after a slow start, hit on 15 of 31 passes for 258 yards, including a 19-yard touchdown strike to end Margene Adkins.

Despite treacherous footing, Jackson ran for 45 yards on four carries, including a 23-yard touchdown run.

BAYS MISS CHANCE

Pullaway Power Shown by Tyees

Victoria High School Tyees tease you and taunt you and frustrate you.

Just when it appears you might pass them they step on the gas and wave "au revoir".

Oak Bay went into Victoria High Wednesday a mere point behind the Tyees. A win and the Bays would have moved into first place in the Inter-High Schoo Soccer eague.

Victoria scored first (Dean Stokes), let Oak Bay square it (Pete Mason), and then whipped in three unanswered goals (Glen Robinson, two, and Stu Wallace).

Now the Bays face pressure for second place from Claremont and Mount View. They are tied for third, a point behind and snarling.

Claremont had to scramble to gain a 1-1 tie with fifth-place Mount Doug. Lorne Bunyan put Claremont ahead 1-0 and for a while Claremont had its problems. Benny Quay, Ted Clark and Ross Clague missed drives. But 20 minutes into the second half Clark scored the tying goal when Mount Doug goalkeeper Jim Marshall hesitated to pick up a loose ball.

Mount View Hornets showed sting and then some, erasing winless Esquimalt 5-0. Brent Russell led the barrage with two goals; the others went to Rick Lamoureux, Graham Lee and Dennis Somner.

All-Blacks Breeze To Victory

MONTREAL (CP)—In an expected result New Zealand's All-Blacks downed Eastern Canada All-Stars 40-3 in a rain-soaked rugby football game at the University of Montreal Sports Centre Wednesday night.

It was the second and last appearance of the world champion All-Blacks in Canada. The New Zealanders downed a British Columbia representative side 36-3 in Vancouver Saturday.

Peter Norris opened the scoring with a penalty goal for Eastern Canada following a scrum infraction in the early minutes of the muddy game. Jubilant as the crowd of 2,000 Canadian rugby fans was, the goal was to prove the only scoring play for the losers.

MUSCLEMEN SET . . . . . . SEVEN WORLD MARKS

Weightlifters Steal Show

MEXICO CITY (CP)—The weightlifters are stealing the show at the pre-Olympic Games.

They have broken seven world records since the big preview of the 1968 Olympics began Sunday for 2,500 athletes from 57 countries.

Only a handful of athletes have performed near world record times in the track and field competition, which winds up today with eight finals including the 1,500- and 5,000-metre races. The Games end Oct. 29.

There has been no standout country so far. Russia has won five field events, Poland four. The United States has three track and one field goal medal to its credit and Cuba has garnered three gold in track.

In the 1,500 metres, the lone North American in the race is Dave Bailey of Toronto, Canada's best miler. He'll be looking to bring his country its first medal of the Games.

The Soviet Union, with 115 athletes competing here, built up a substantial 9-4 gold medal lead over the U.S. and Poland by winning in rowing, gymnastics, track and field and weightlifting Wednesday.

Miguelina Cobian, a 25-year-old Cuban ceramics worker, had the honor of becoming the first double gold medallist of the Games, completing a women's sprint sweep by winning the 200-metre dash in 23.1 seconds.

Victor Kurentsov, 26-year-old Soviet Army officer, lifted a total of 1,036¼ pounds, a world record, to win the gold medal in the middleweight class. His press of 347¼ pounds also was a world mark.

Massashi Ohuchi, a Tokyo policeman, ate a big Japanese meal after he weighed in and then set a world record in the snatch of 330¾ pounds.

OVERFED RECORD

Ochuchi, who won the middleweight silver medal, found he was 1.1 pounds over the class limit when he stepped on the scales a second time for verification of his weight. So his snatch record went into the books as a new light heavyweight standard. If he hadn't been overweight, it would have counted as a middleweight record as well.

Aldo Roy, 25-year-old from Sudbury attending the University of Ottawa, was sixth with a total lift of 826¾ pounds.

Japan won the men's all-round team title in gymnastics, with Russia second and the U.S. third.

Sidney Jensen of Montreal finished 30th with 103½ points.

Nataliya Kutchinskaya of Russia won the women's individual all-round title with 77.10 points. Susan McDonnell of Toronto, Pan-American gold medallist in the uneven bars, was 27th with 68.50 points.

We changed the bottle- not the whisky.

We've added a big gold star to the Seagram's Special Old bottle and squared off the sides.

But if you liked Special Old before, don't get upset. The bottle may be different, but that smooth, easy taste hasn't changed a bit. Still just as easy to like.

'The Young Should Lead, Not Protest'

Young people who prefer to demonstrate against conditions they don't like, instead of working to correct them came under fire Wednesday night from Eric Charman, past president of the Victoria Junior Chamer of Commerce.

Mr. Charman said some segments of youth feel if they can't get what they want, they must get out and demonstrate.

The are misguided and become tools for those who think their role is to "get out and demonstrate," he said.

COUNCIL CHALLENGE

He was referring indirectly to the recent challenge hurled at city council by the Victoria Youth Council, demanding representation on council under threat of setting up an "alternative."

Mr. Charman was not attacking all youth, however.

He said he was looking to the young people of the country to participate in leading Canada.

The young should be working in organizations and building societies where they can "air their frustrations and channel their objections," he said.

MIGUEL ASTURIAS
. . . champion of poor

Guatemalan Wins Prize For Writing

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) —Miguel Angel Asturias, Guatemalan ambassador to France, today was awarded the 1967 Nobel prize for literature.

The 67-year-old champion of Latin American Indians won the prize for "his highly colored writings rooted in a national individuality and Indian traditions", the Swedish Academy of Letters said.

This year's prize sum is 320,000 crowns ($62,000).

Asturias has spoken out strongly against dictatorships oppressing the native population living in misery. One of his major works is an accusation against the U.S. United Fruit Company's dominance of the banana-rich republic.

WENT INTO EXILE

Asturias spent many years in exile in Argentina, Italy and France. He went into self-imposed exile in 1954 after the overthrow of the left-wing government of Jacobo Arbenz.

His most famous works include Mulata de Tal (The Mulatta and the Fly) and Los Ojos de Los Enterrados (The Eyes of the Dead).

The Guatemalan diplomat has written 10 novels since the age of 30—all concened with injustice against the poor and the weak.

In April, 1966, he was awarded the Soviet Union's international Lenin Peace Prize.

In Paris, Asturias told a reporter: "This prize is a great encouragement for me—not only for me but for all of Latin America."

He added: "The novelist must be a witness of his time. He must seek the living reality of his country, its aspirations—and step aside to let speak a conscience which expresses itself through personages and situations."

No Byelection Decision Yet

Premier Bennett Wednesday continued his refusal to say whether he will call a byelection to fill a vacancy in Vancouver South before the next session of the legislature.

"I have given no thought to a byelection at the present time," he replied at a press conference. The vacancy was created by the death of Socred MLA Tom Bate Sept. 21.

B.C. Awaits Duncan Dam $

The delayed $12 million for flood control payments resulting from completion of the Duncan Dam still is owing to B.C., Premier Bennett said Wednesday.

He said it is up to the federal government, which made the Columbia River Treaty with the U.S. under which the money came due last July, to send a cheque to B.C.

Ottawa must provide the payment whether it receives it from the U.S. or not, he said.

But he added he was sure it would come "and with interest —although there might be some argument about the rate of interest."

YOUNG autograph seekers throng around Marina Mdivani after recital Wednesday.

Pianist Mdivani Displays Superb Power, Subtlety

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Soviet pianist Marina Mdivani, who strikes one as charmingly natural and unassuming in conversation (conducted in fluent English), at the keyboard becomes a creature of superb power and rare subtlety.

Guest artist with the Sunday-Monday Victoria Symphony concerts, Madame Mdivani was presented in recital Wednesday night at McPherson Playhouse.

With the symphony orchestra the pianist will perform the well-loved and briliant Tachikowsky B-flat minor Concerto.

But Wednesday, she gave her audience a chance to appreciate the many aspects of her talent which the concerto will not reveal and it was an immensely satisfying experience.

Such an artist as Mdivani, heard in concerto, is like coming across an arresting excerpt from a book—you crave to read the rest.

Perhaps the most arresting illustration of her depth of musical thought and command of tonal color was achieved in the great suite by Mussorgsky, Pictures at an Exhibition.

It is difficult to imagine a more artistically complete performance of this long suite, nor a more interesting one than Madame Mdivani gave us.

TWO PORTRAITS

The two contrasting portraits, vivid and distinctive in character, one from the other; the frolicking light-heartedness and chit-chat of "The Tuileries;" the shadowed awe of "Catacombs;" all were presented with an imagination that equalled the painter's and illumined the composer.

Madame Mdivani opened her program with the Mozart Fantasi in B minor and one was immediately aware of being in the presence of an exceptional artist.

The impression grew with Haydn's Sonata in F, Op 18, the Chopin G-minor Ballade and Prokofiev's Four Etudes.

Limpid, immaculate playing pervaded the Mozart and Haydn. These, and her encore, a Scarlatti Sonata, were the ultimate in refined elegant beauty.

The Chopin, and the arresting Prokofiev Etudes displayed the pianist's fabulous technical accomplishment.

But neither her power and virtuosity, nor her precise perfection in the 17th and 18th century classics, were more impressive than her sheer artistry of invoking mood.

Interpretively, especially in her Mozart and Chopin, she does not hesitate to inject some individualism, but her ideas even when not altogether orthodox, are always musical and well thought out.

THE GREAT CITY OF LONDON
a personally narrated colour movie by
FRAN WILLIAM HALL
In this century practically every decade has had its city. Today it is London . . . which has long been known and loved as one of the truly great cities of the world. Now seized by change, London has burst into bloom. A blend of ancient elegance and new opulence, the city is alive with beatles and birds (girls); buzzing with minicars and "telly" stars; pulsing with excitement. London is the place to go and Fran William Hall has made the scenes that show London's pendulum now swing with verve and elan.

'I KNOW IT'S ILLEGAL'—CLINIC CHIEF

School Provides Birth Pills

TORONTO (CP)—Birth control information has been supplied to students at Ryerson Polytechnic Institute for the last 11 years, Dr. Donald Barr, head of the school's health clinic, said Wednesday night.

Dr. Barr said he is aware that his action in supplying such information is contrary to the Criminal Code.

"It is illegal," he told the Ryerson Student's Administrative Council.

He said that as part of the clinic's service prescriptions for birth control pills or contraceptive devices have been supplied to at least 24 unmarried girl students in the last year.

This part of the clinic's service is not publicized, Dr. Barr said, for fear that parents might exert pressure on politicians to have the service discontinued.

At the University of Toronto, the Students' Administrative Council has been supplying a description of the various kinds of contraceptive methods available to anyone who asks for it. The information sheets urges the students to see their doctors for more detailed information and advice.

OLD PLANTS TASTE GOOD

Little-known grain plants which grow 6,000 feet up in the Andes Mountains, some older than cultivated corn, are being improved for human consumption.

POET Anne Hebert, 41, of Montreal, has received a Canada Council award for outstanding contribution to arts, humanities and social sciences. Her poems are widely read in English and French Canada, the U.S. and France. (CP Wirephoto.)

Arthur Mayse

Today we have a little of this and a pinch of that, commencing with a letter from Doug Blagrave, of 1547 Mount Douglas Crossroad, on the subject of air raid sirens.

"I'm a long-time Air Force man," says he, "and I've heard all the pathetic arguments used to justify the installation of sirens. They are based on reasons that applied 25 years ago and should not persuade a 12-year-old boy."

Mr. Blagrave goes on to protest against "meaningless wails that would do nobody good if it were for real." He feels the municipalities should outlaw the sirens and require that they be dismantled.

Since the yowlers are national defence department installations, I doubt the municipalites could shuck them even if they were so inclined. As for their usefulness in time of trouble, I can only air my personal vision of how the drill would go.

First: the big boom. Then, far off on the perimeters, a belated siren wailing with none to hear.

On a recent evening six matrons chattered their way toward the Gordon Head home of their eighth member, a new addition to the bridge group. The seventh, I should explain, was to follow a few minutes later, if she could make it. If not, she'd send a friend who, she insisted, they would just adore.

Their directions were explicit:

"You know the so-and-sos? Well, my place is almost directly across the street. There's a big tree at the front, and the porch light will be on. You can't miss it!"

Arrived, the ladies rang and waited. A little boy in pyjamas ushered them into the front room, said "Mummy won't be long," then vanished.

Presently the door chimes tinkled, the small boy answered and another woman entered. She seemed very nice, though shy, and they set out to make her feel at home by engaging her in a brisk patter of conversation about the weather and the high price of everything.

This went on for several minutes. Then the supposed substitute for their seventh swallowed twice and said, "I'm afraid I don't quite understand. Are you sure you're in the right house?"

They weren't, and in a confusion of apologies, they trooped off to a place two doors removed which also boasted a large tree in its front lawn.

Their hostess—right one this time—met them on her lighted porch. Number seven had phoned to say that neither she nor her friend could come, so would it be all right if she invited a neighbor to make up their quorum?

You guessed it: same lady, and a good hand she played, too!

In these days of precise schedules and everyone in a hurry, it's nice to hear about someone willing to make time for an act of kindness. I don't know the names of the trainmen involved, but according to friend Lew Lunde of 2559 Bermuda Place, they rescued a young member of Victoria's Thunderbirds from a predicament that would have put a proper kink in her trip to Expo.

Mr. Lunde and his family were also Expo bound that mid-August day when the train with the girls' drill team among its passengers made a five-minute stop for viewing and picture-taking at Mt. Robson lookout.

The train had resumed its up-grade haul when one of the Thunderbirds discovered that she had left her handbag behind at the lookout, and in it her spending money for the trip.

"The engineer must have backed that train pretty close to half a mile so she could recover her bag," Lew recalls.

Home now, with thoughts of cloudy Venus where a Soviet surprise package lies. Lord help us, the moon's become but a way-station!

Genetics Law Smiles Kindly on Bi-Racial Children

By KATHRINE THOMAS

The wider apart parents are racially the stronger their children will be.

This statement, made by geneticists Dr. and Mrs. E. Derek Styles, came as a surprise to many of the prospective adopting parents attending the first public meeting on adoption held this week by the Greater Victoria Family and Children's Service.

"The wider the cross, the less chance there is of an abnormality as a result of inbreeding," Dr. Styles said.

"Children of inter-racial marriages are the results of populations that have been breeding separately for a long time.

"When you have inbreeding, there is a much likelier risk of bad genes, bad characteristics, expressing themselves."

At the moment there are nearly 20 infants available for adoption and almost the equal number of approved adoption homes. But most applicants want white Caucasian children and half of the infants are inter-racial—part Indian and part Oriental.

Dr. and Mrs. Styles, together with adopting parents Dylis and Hunter Poole and social worker Oliver Hatter, formed a resource panel to answer any questions on adoption.

Among the questions answered by the panel:

● Is religion a barrier to adoption?

The agency is non-denominational. It tries to place Roman Catholic children in Catholic homes unless the mother signs a religious waiver. The agency will not place a child with Jehovah Witnesses unless specifically requested by the mother, because of the Witnesses' refusal to allow blood transfusions. However if the mother has no religion or does not care that her child be brought up in a specifically Protestant home, they may consider placing the child in a non-religious home. The welfare of the child comes first.

● How long does one have to wait for a child after application has been made?

It takes two or three months for a social worker to make a home study. Then the waiting period is up to three months. But if the adopting parents are very particular, if they specify sex, race, educational background, it may take longer.

● What is the usual age of children for adoption?

Ten days after birth. There are few children adoptable after age two. The agency tries to find older children permanent foster homes. They need roots and if they are well-adjusted in their homes and their foster parents can raise them to maturity they will not be moved — even for adoption.

● What is the age limit for adopting parents?

45 years if a medical report (which is done on all adopting parents) says they are in good health and capable of raising the child to maturity.

● Are brothers and sisters placed in the same home?

Yes, the agency does its best to try to place them together so families will not be broken up.

● What are the marriage requirements for adopting parents?

They must be married two years.

● Is it necessary to have your own children before you can adopt?

No. But if there are natural children, the agency prefers the adopting child to be the youngest, the baby of the family.

● Can a natural mother who has signed adoption consent try to reclaim the child in the six months before adoption is completed?

It is very unlikely. She would have to show that her consent had been obtained through duress or without full understanding. There have been two cases out of 10,000 in the last five years that have reached the Supreme Court and the judge has decided in favor of the adopting parents.

● What are the main reasons for refusing application?

Marriage problems and bad health.

The next public meeting on adoption will be held Monday, Nov. 20 at 8 p.m. at Spencer-house, 1951 Cook Street.

Cabinet Trips 'Not Junkets' Says Bennett

With two cabinet ministers out of the country on extended tours and Premier Bennett just back from his third trip abroad within the past 12 months, the British Columbia government is displaying unusual sensitivity to criticism of "cabinet junketing".

Latest manifestation that it's a sore spot came from Premier Bennett Wednesday when he called a press conference and immediately brandished a letter to reporters as they filed into his office.

He said the letter came from the head of a giant international firm, Union Miniere, who said he was happy to have met Mr. Bennett in Belgium last month and was sending a team of experts to B.C. to survey investment opportunities.

"That's what happens on these so-called junkets," Mr. Bennett snapped at the reporters.

"But I don't mind all this criticism. We who have been long in public life don't mind these things," he said in a softer tone.

PERMISSION

Earlier, Trade and Industry Minister Ralph Loffmark called a special press conference to answer the criticism and said sarcastically he would await press permission to spend $700 on an 11-day trip to Europe and Montreal on five missions.

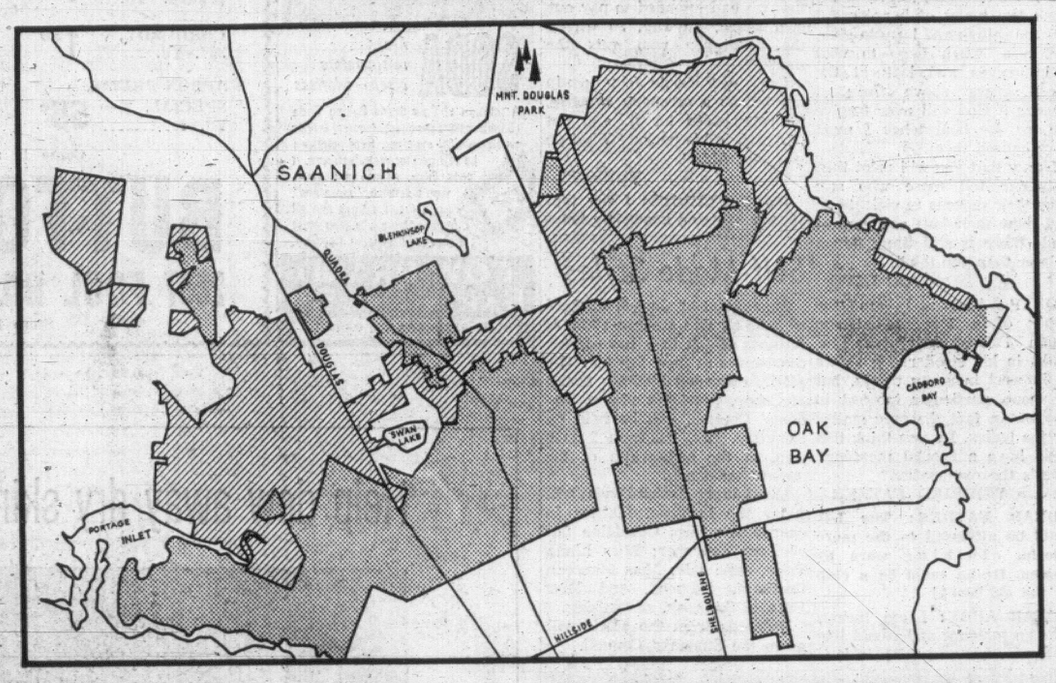
The trip is being planned because:

A Vancouver consulting engineering firm wants his help in negotiating a lumber contract in Yugoslavia; a major German institution investor needs a bit more persuading to take a plunge into B.C.; a French group is interested in copper exploration and possibilities of establishing a B.C. copper smelter; another French group is interested in a joint venture in the pulp and paper field; and he has an opportunity to buy some equipment and film at Expo for use in the B.C. pavilion at Expo 70 in Osaka.

TOO MUCH

"Am I to tell (businessmen) that I can't go because the paper says I am spending too much money?" he demanded.

Mr. Loffmark said B.C. newspapers make no fuss about extensive trips by federal cabinet ministers but attack Highways Minister P. A. Gaglardi's Lear jet and his (Loffmark's) travel expenses which are estimated at $7,000 this year.



SPRING vote is likley for Saanich ratepayers on sewer utility proposal. Scheme would merge separately-financed sewered areas (dotted) with 3,460 acres of unsewered land (lined) to create one sewer enterprise. Extending sewers on this scale has been estimated as a $6 million project. Septic tank land may be sewered within five years of passage of the necessary bylaw and financed over 30-year period. Half the cost would be for rebuilding 50-year-old outfall at Macaulay Point and running it to deep water, Hampton-Macaulay trunk line and sub-trunk lines.

REFERENDUM RULED OUT

Youth Council Spanked For 'Juvenile' Approach

Mayor Hugh Stephen today accused the Victoria Youth Council of "gross discourtesy" in releasing a brief containing VYC demands before bringing it to council.

He told VYC representative Paul Williamson that the youth group's action was "juvenile" and said he was disappointed by their approach.

The VYC earlier this week released a statement asking for a referendum on whether they should have representation on city council and the school board, and asking for a city youth centre. They wanted the referendum held at the Dec. 9 election.

DEMONSTRATIONS

If it appears that no action would be taken by city council, the brief said, the VYC would stage demonstrations and set up an alternative council using city hall facilities.

Mr. Williamson was appearing before city finance committee for VYC member Charles Barber, whose car broke down on route from a youth conference in Nanaimo.

Mayor Stephen told Mr. Williamson he was not speaking against him personally, but against the VYC as a whole.

He said the youth group's approach "alienates the last vestige of sympathy you would have had" from council.

The city would have welcomed them if they had come "as sensible people" and said they would form a group with representation to work with council the mayor said.

But the group doesn't seem to want to operate through "existing channels," he said.

Mr. Williamson replied that the group saw nothing wrong in presenting their position before going to council. Councils tend to be secret and "we want to be open," he said.

NO REFERENDUM

The city has no power to hold a referendum such as the VYC suggested, the mayor said, because it operates under the provincial municipal act.

He reprimanded the VYC for "not doing its homework" and failing to recognize the fact that the city does not have the power to grant the group's demands.

Redlin Guilty In Sooke Slaying

James Frederick Redlin, 37-year-old millwright, today was found guilty of non-capital murder in the fatal shooting of Mrs. Lavina Nicholson near Sooke last May 9.

A 12-man jury returned its verdict at 1 p.m. after deliberating for nearly two hours.

He was sentenced to life.

"I have no alternative but to pass this sentence," said Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz.

Nicholas Mussalem, defending Redlin, said in his statement to the jury Wednesday afternoon that the rifle shot which killed Mrs. Nicholson was fired accidently.

Mr. Mussalem said the height of a bullet hole in the wall and wounds suffered by Mrs. Nicholson indicated that the rifle held by Redlin was discharged accidentally at an upward angle.

Crown prosecutor Kenneth Murphy told the 12-man jury that the evidence all pointed to the guilt of the accused. He recalled the testimony of Harold Nicholson, husband of the dead woman, who said Redlin entered their bedroom with a rifle at about 4 a.m. on May 9.

Mr. Justice Nemetz gave his charge to the jury this morning, after which the jurymen retired to consider their verdict.

THREW SHOE AT POLICEMAN

Five witnesses testified in magistrate's court today to the good character of a man charged with intoxication and assaulting a police officer.

Donald Kennedy, 37, of 930 Snowdrop, pleaded guilty to both charges.

Court was told that after he had been arrested for intoxication Oct. 15, Kennedy threw his shoe at Saanich police Constable William Nixon.

Fining the accused $350, Magistrate Östler commented "people assaulting a police officer can usually expect a jail term.

"A fine is most unusual and should by no means be considered the general rule."

STRIKE TALKS TO RE-OPEN ON MONDAY

Negotiations between McCarter Shingle and Shake Ltd. and striking shingle weavers will be reopened Monday.

Talks will resume at 10:30 a.m. at Red Lion Inn, a company representative said today.

Management will be represented by company president William K. McCarter and Forest Industrial Relations representatives.

Bruce Robertson, business agent for local 2802, Shingle Weavers' Union and his committee are expected to attend.

The union walked off the job Monday stating that their negotiations for wage parity with other parts of the industry, were showing insufficient progress.

Hansard Studies Begin

By JOHN MIKA
Times Legislative Reporter

The British Columbia government has two studies under way on the question of introducing a Hansard into the legislature, it was revealed today.

The disclosure was made to 28 directors of the British Columbia Chamber of Commerce who met the cabinet this morning for their annual presentation of a brief.

For the first time, the chamber's brief included a strong recommendation that the government set up a verbatim reporting system for legislative debates for the benefit of MLAs and the people who elect them.

FIVE PROPOSALS

The proposal was one of five that were stressed by the directors in their brief of some 50 recommendations and it appeared to impress the cabinet, chamber president J. Bruce Smith of Kelowna told reporters after the meeting.

Mr. Smith said the cabinet gave the impression the Hansard request—which became a hot political issue before and during the last session—is still "a live issue."

Businessmen were told that a study of the question is being conducted by committees in both the cabinet and the Social Credit caucus and Mines Minister Donald Brothers recently prepared a report on the subject after surveying other provinces.

VARIOUS OPINIONS

"But even in the cabinet itself I imagine there are various opinions," Mr. Smith said.

He said some of the ministers suggested they felt that verbatim records were to blame for "rather poor attendance" in the House of Commons and the U.S. Senate.

It was also suggested that spontaneity and quality of debate suffered because legislators were constantly aware of how the record would look.

Mr. Smith said he "hoped" the chamber had gained ground on the Hansard issue but he was more confident about some of the other proposals put to the cabinet.

FISH MINISTER

He said the ministers promised "serious consideration" of the chamber's urging that B.C. revive a department of fisheries with its own minister—a post that was abolished in 1958 in a cabinet shuffle.

He said the cabinet asked the chamber's directors to make a further submission on this proposal—another recommendation that was prevalent among briefs sent to the cabinet by various provincial groups before the last session.

The cabinet also "formally told us they wholeheartedly back us" in the chamber's rejection of the Carter royal commission's recommendations for revamping the taxation principles applying to the mining industry now which permit depletion allowances and other write-offs to encourage exploration.

Mr. Smith said the chamber's request for withdrawal of new legislation last session placing succession duties on share stocks in companies controlled by non-residents of the province also impressed the cabinet.

Resources Minister Ray Williston "confirmed that he had evidence of problems arising from this particular amendment to the Succession Duty Act," Mr. Smith said.

The chamber was asked to make a further submission of specific cases in support of its contention the legislation would tend to discourage capital investment from outside.

That Racket Just Mortars

Mortars firing on the Albert Head range this morning sent a number of Esquimalt and area residents to their phones to find out what the racket was all about.

Wind and low-lying cloud banks bounced the sound back down to the Esquimalt area loud and clear.

Work Point Barracks authorities voiced regret at the disturbance but said the practice was an important part of a soldier's training.

The unit firing the 81-millimetre mortars was from the Queens Own Rifles. There is no other suitable range nearby, said a military spokesman.

Indians On Panel

A six-man panel from the Cowichan Indian Band will discuss the main challenges facing native Indians Sunday evening.

The meeting, which will be open to the general public, will be held at the Thomas More Centre, 4053 Gordon Head Road, at 7:30 p.m.

Following the panel discussion, led by the six Indian leaders, questions will be invited from the floor.

NOT LAYMAN OR STATE — SAYS DR. PETER BANKS

Doctor Must Decide Who Shall Live, Die

The choice of whose life will be saved by dramatic new medical innovations must always rest with the doctor, a Victoria physician maintains.

Dr. Peter Banks made the observation in a speech to the Canadian Medical Association in Banff last April. His speech is reported in a recent issue of the British Columbia Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Banks referred as an example to the new artificial kidney machines which are able to greatly prolong life, but which are still in short supply because of costs.

★ ★ ★

(Nine patients are being treated by artificial kidney units at Royal Jubilee Hospital here. So far there are sufficient facilities to suit the demand.)

(But in some U.S. cities particularly, there have been greater demands for the treatment than hospitals can meet. Committees have been set up to determine who shall live and who shall not.)

Dr. Banks stated:

"When one looks into the future I would suggest to you that no society will be able to afford for all of its citizens, all the new arteries and the new kidneys and the new hearts and the expensive biological chemical readjustments that science will make possible.

"Therefore we shall be faced with the tremendous problem of patient selection.

"On what basis are we to select who has what?

"Is it better for society that a middle-aged and successful man should go on the artificial kidney or should it be used for the young unproven student?

"I think regardless of whether we think it is right or wrong, doctors will be forced to go on making these decisions, because I don't think anyone else can. And I don't think it's going to increase their popularity one bit."

He said the alternative is that these decisions be made by groups of citizens whose regard for others guides their actions.

★ ★ ★

"But in practice these groups often turn out to be less altruistic (having less regard for others) than the doctors, and usually finish by asking for medical advice anyway.

"The other alternative is that the government will make these decisions, and as a student of George Orwell (a writer who envisaged a society planned for heartless efficiency), I don't like that one bit."

This is surely a very important reason for trying to keep our doctors always independent as much as we can, of the possibility of government direction and control."

The doctor's statements followed a description of the vast expansion of medical knowledge and vast expansion of demand for medical services.

"It takes no scientific soothsayer to predict that the knowledge explosion must inevitably lead to a cost explosion and that the investigative facilities of every hospital in the next two decades will have to double and double again.

"The question will arise, can we as a society afford this. But this is no answer. Already there are those who say that everybody should have a complete checkup every year.

"If this was done, it would use the full time of all the doctors in the country doing that and nothing else," he stated.

Dr. Banks said that all over the world there is a shortage of doctors. In Canada they are relatively abundant. We have one for every 825 people. But we need 1,300 new doctors every year to keep this supply constant.

★ ★ ★

Despite this known need, our universities are supplying only 850 a year and some of these leave Canada for the U.S. Canada has filled the gap by importing doctors, but their countries of origin are moving to stop the departures.

This is why medical universities in Canada are lobbying for new medical schools, he said.

Mr. and Mrs. James St. Elmo Meiss, 958 Orillia Street, will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary on Sunday by holding an "at home" in the Scotia Room of Holyrood House from 2 to 5 p.m. The couple was married in St. John's Anglican Church by the late Canon F. A. P. Chadwick on October 24, 1917. Mr. Meiss served as head sidesman of the church for many years and his wife is still active in the Chancel Guild. They have one daughter, Mrs. James (Thelma) Randall and one granlson, Terrance Randall, both of this city. Born in Victoria, Mr. Meiss has lived in British Columbia all his life. He was employed as a wireless-telegrapher in the telecommunications branch of the federal government and was stationd in many communities on the west coast and, in later years, served in Victoria as chief radio inspector for Vancouver Island. He served with the Royal Canadian Navy during the First World War. His wife was born in Beatrice, Nebraska, and came to Canada with her parents in 1912. Both have given a great deal of their leisure time to fraternal organizations.

WHY GROW OLD?

By JOSEPHINE LOWMAN

Here is a letter which will interest many women because either they have a husband who has retired or one who is going to retire.

Lowman

Dear Mrs. Lowman,

I enjoyed your recent article on retirement. Don't let anyone tell you that the first two or three years of married life are the hardest. They say that because their husband has not retired yet.

I did not look forward to my husband's retirement mainly because he has no special interests or hobbies with which to fill his time. He doesn't fish or play golf or bowl and if he picks up a hammer to fix anything, I am ready to leave home.

However, I accepted the fact that I was going to have a man around the house most of the time and made up my mind to make a success of this retirement business. As I look back on the past few years, I think the biggest thing I lost was my independence.

I had always attended to paying the bills and doing the shopping and I did my own laundry. Then I thought, "What is he going to do with his time besides empty the garbage, burn the trash, and wait for the mailman and the paper boy?" So I turned all the paying and buying over to my husband. He even takes the clothes to the launderette for me.

Since he likes to talk and visit with old and new acquaintances, he usually runs into one or two people and spends the hour visiting, which is fine with me. But I am wondering if I am being fair to myself? I'm not out of the house at all lots of days.

I miss my neighbors and friends dropping in for a woman's chit-chat. Who can enjoy that with a man sitting in? I also miss the telephone calls I used to get. My friends do not call as they used to. When they do call I can feel my husband getting tense if the conversation goes on for very long.

I am telling you this because there ought to be some way many wives could get together, air their grievances and learn some new tricks about how to make husband's retirement work for both him and the wife.

Of course, you can do this with one or two friends but many more ideas would be helpful."

This is a wonderful idea! I often use my column for group therapy. Write in and tell us what problems your husband's retirement created and what changes in attitude or plan of life you have found helpful.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Love and Respect Your Parents Now!

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 18 years old, and a freshman at college. When I was packing to come here I came across a newspaper clipping from several years back, which I had cut out of your column one day to remind me of what my parents really meant to me. I have read and reread this article and I hope you will reprint it so other young people will stop and THINK. Thank you.

GRATEFUL

"DEAR ABBY: I am the most heartbroken person in the world. I always found time to go everywhere else but to see my old grey-haired parents. They sat at home loving me just the same.

It is too late now to give them those few hours of happiness I was too selfish and busy to give, and now, when I go to visit their graves and look at the green grass above them, I wonder if God will ever forgive me for the heartaches I must have caused them.

I pray that you will print this, Abby, to tell those who still have their parents to visit them, and show their love and respect while there is still time. For it is later than you think.

TOO LATE

DEAR ABBY: I am the father of a 10-month-old son whom I frequently take for walks in his stroller. He shows an interest in many things, but he shows particular interest in women. In fact, he only smiles for the ladies. Do you think this could have a special meaning? What's the explanation?

WORRIED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: The boy could be attracted to the more colorful clothing worn by women. Or he could be a chip off the old block!

DEAR ABBY: I am furious over an incident and would like to know what you think of it.

My husband and I went out for dinner last week, and quite by accident we met some friends who asked us to join them. (When I say "friends," I use the term loosely.) I'll call the man "John."

When the check came, my husband asked for separate checks, but John insisted that we could settle up later. Then John's wife made a quick remark that we should let John pick up the check so he could put it on his expense account.

John paid for dinner and drinks for the four of us and obtained a receipt for it.

Now, my husband received a call from John asking for our share in CASH! My husband says it's no skin off our noses, that we had intended to pay our own share, anyway, so what's the difference who gets the money?

I say, why should John turn in our bill as a company expense, be reimbursed for it, and put our cash in his pocket? What do you say, Abby!

FURIOUS

DEAR FURIOUS: I say that if your husband knowingly helps "John" to skin his company, it's plenty of skin off your noses. Write these people off as "friends" to dine with, if, indeed, to have as friends at all.

Problems? Write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif., 90069. For a personal reply, enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Multi-Purpose Opener Great for Sportsmen

By PENNY SAVER

The fishing season is in full swing and for the past few Saturdays my paragon has been sailing away at the crack of dawn to find himself "a big one." I was persuaded to go along on the last expedition and although we didn't catch anything that would fill the family freezer, we had lots of fun trying. I managed to steer the boat into a kelp bed only once, and, apart from losing one of hubby's best bait tins, I did pretty well for a beginner. I don't think I'll ever be too good a fisherman but I did enjoy landing on a small island and doing some exploring. While we were on the island I prepared a true "fisherman's lunch".

The lunch was definitely "fisherman's lunch" because I had to open the can of beans and meatballs with a conveniently pointed rock—Hubby forgot the can-opener. To repair this problem the other day I bought him a dandy little multi-purpose can-opener that he can take on his next fishing trip. This opener not only punctures cans but will lift and re-seal bottle-caps, too. These gadgets are all attached to the same handle and it will be a handy item to have along on camping trips and picnics next summer, too. It is priced at $2.29.

In one store I saw another item I was certain the better half would like. It's a cocktail recipe guide. This gadget will not only be a novel addition to his bar equipment but will save time when he's trying to whip up a special concoction. All the recipes are numbered, and as you turn the bottle's cap the "label" rotates, revealing a selection of cocktail recipes. The paragon was delighted with this gadget, which is priced at 98 cents.

I'm still trying to catch up with the mounting supply of mending I have stashed away in the den cupboard. This is a chore I know I can put off indefinitely, but the other day I was inspired to at least buy the supplies for the job. Every sewing basket should have several spools of black and white thread, as these are most commonly used. To keep a good supply on hand you can buy a package that contains 12 spools of thread—six black and six white. It is priced at 39 cents.

If you'd like to know where I shopped for these items, please give me a call at 382-3131.

Goldstream Project Begins

Mrs. S. Easton announced this year's plans for Project Goldstream when the Queen Alexandra Solarium Junior League recently met at the Inn. She said the mobile refreshment unit would be at the Goldstream Park to supply hot dogs, hamburgers and coffee to people watching the fish run on Oct. 29, Nov. 5, Nov. 11, Nov. 12, Nov. 19 and Nov. 26. All proceeds will go to the solarium.

Plans were also finalized for the Hillbilly Hop, a fall dance to be held on Friday, Oct. 27 at the Fraser Street Hall, beginning at 8 p.m. The affair is open to the public. Gary Howard and his combo will play for dancing. Tickets may be obtained at the door or by phoning the convener, Miss Carol Corke, at 385-3197.

It was decided to hold an auction and rummage sale in the hall of Centennial United Church on Nov. 29 and donations may be given by phoning the convener, Mrs. M. Thomas, at 479-2309 or rummage sale convener, Mrs. J. Chalmers, 478-6635.

Mrs. B. Hodacsek reported on the members' work as serviteurs at the annual Government House garden party. Members volunteered to act as checkers at the symphony concerts.

Special welcomes were given to a new member, Miss Louise Monkman, and life member, Mrs. D. Eade.

Social get-together, Icebreakers Club of Victoria, Friday at 2 p.m., Empress Hotel's Princess Louise Room. Bridge, canasta, tea and coffee. Open to all newcomers and visitors. For further particulars phone 385-7996 or 384-8359.

Becomes Youngest Mother in Argentine Medical History

NINE-YEAR-OLD GIRL BEARS A SON

CORDOBA (Reuters) — Nine-year-old Maria Eulalia Allende gave birth here Wednesday to a seven-pound baby boy and became the youngest known mother in Argentina medical history, doctors reported.

Doctors said both were in excellent condition in hospital in this central Argentine city, 500 miles from Buenos Aires.

The birth, which was normal, followed a month-long stay in hospital for the mother. She underwent psychological treatment to prepare for the event and was fed a special diet to build up her stamina, doctors said.

Police are hunting for the alleged father, named as her cousin Ernesto, in his early 20s, who vanished from home two months ago.

THAI SILK BRIDAL GOWN

A floor-length gown of ivory Thai silk was worn by Dorothy Wendy Harris when she became the bride of Robert Claver Simson in Holy Trinity Church. Styled on A-lines, it was fashioned with sleeves softly belled at the elbows. Gardenias and white chrysanthemums formed her headpiece. She carried a bouquet of similar flowers.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Harris, 1262 Land's End Road, Sidney. The groom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. William C. Simson of Vancouver. Canon F. C. Vaughan-Birch officiated at the ceremony. Mr. Harris gave his daughter in marriage.

Pale gold, pale apricot and plum toned dahlias with Japanese plum foliage decorated the church.

Mrs. Allan Campbell, Calgary, was the only attendant for her sister. She wore a gown of pale gold Thai silk styled on A-lines and fashioned with bell sleeves. She carried a small bouquet of autumn flowers.

Gerald McGavin, Vancouver, was best man. John Simson, the groom's brother, and Jack McLenhan, both of Vancouver, ushered the guests.

A buffet luncheon was served at the reception following in the Deep Cove Chalet. Jas Saull proposed the toast to the bride.

Guests travelled from Vancouver, Seattle and Calgary to attend the service.

For travelling on honeymoon to Tahiti and Hawaii the new Mrs. Simson chose a three-piece suit in cherry red which she accented with camel accessories.

On their return the newlyweds will make their home at 929 Fairfield Road.

Andy Stephen Looks at TV

There is nothing kind about advancing age. It is even more cruel when it causes family upheaval and results in banishment to a home for the elderly and the loss of the will to live.

Stephen

CBS-TV began the second season of CBS Playhouse with a meaningful contemporary drama, "Do Not Go Gentle Into That Good Night," starring Melvyn Douglas and Shirley Booth.

The play, whose title was taken from a poem written by Dylan Thomas, concerned itself with a theme of importance and urgency to millions of people, old age.

Melvyn Douglas, as Peter Schermann, begins as a passive person, beloved by his children and grandchildren but out of place in their daily lives. He consents to move into an old folk's home, run by a strict set of rules and offering no incentive for self-sufficiency among the elderly residents.

Frustration and despair result in his leaving the home and taking up residence at another home where he strikes up a friendship with a gay and lively woman, Shirley Booth. But she is unable to inspire in Schermann her own acceptance of whatever advancing years may hold for them and leaves. He finds his niche.

It was powerful and sad at the same time. It's too bad life cannot be as gentle as a play in its ending.

Douglas added to his distinguished career with his portrayal of the main character. He gave Schermann a dimension of humanity in not surrendering meekly to the inevitable end.

Miss Booth, Warren Stevens, Lawrence Dobkin and all others involved provided CBS Playhouse with a sound launching pad for another successful season.

The series was launched last season as a means of making significant contributions to dramatic literature written specifically for television.

Last season's inaugural play, "The Final War of Olly Winter," was acclaimed by critics and viewers alike. There is no reason to belive Tuesday's offering will not receive like treatment.

The sponsor of the opener was wise in two respects, too. First in having the judgment of being able to pick superior TV fare and, secondly, presenting the drama with no commercial breaks.

Esquimalt RCNSA Commodore Retires

Seven years of leadership as the commodore of the Esquimalt Squadron, Royal Canadian Naval Sailing Association comes to an end for J. R. (Dick) Sharpe this week as he steps down after seven years in the squadron's top office.

Mr. Sharpe, who has long been active in Pacific International Yachting Association, as well as local yachting circles, announced his decision to retire as commodore at the squadron's annual prizegiving ceremony, held in the clubhouse at Munro Head.

One of the most surprised winners at the ceremony was Mrs. Sharpe, who was presented with the Prosser Trophy in recognition of her valuable contribution and service over the years.

Mike Watton, skipper of the sailerette, White Swan, was the winner of the Pacific Naval Laboratory Trophy.

Runner-up was Bill Thompson's Blue Goose.

Other trophies for sailorette summer racing went to: Gordie Churchill's Black Hawk, Royal Channel Islands Yacht Club Trophy; John Holt's Silver Heron, second. The Frank Heaton Trophy went to Fred Douglas' Golden Gull. In second spot was Don Ross' Green Teal.

Joy Eadon won the RCNSA Trophy, given to the winning crew member to successfully take over as skipper during a five race series. Second to her was Neal Moir.

Bill Whitby skippered Black Hawk to victory in the Weather or Knot Series, being trailed by Mike Watton's White Swan. The Cole Trophy went to Don Ross' Green Teal, with John Holt's Silver Heron being awarded second position.

John Sharpe won the Corby Trophy while Doug Hemphill was the big winner in the Fireball series. Second to him was Jack Stacey.

Peter Robin sailed to first position in service dinghy competition. In second place was Pete Hemphill.

At the annual meeting, held on Wednesday evening, Mr. Sharpe was honored by being made the first life member of the local squadron.

For the first time in many years members voted an all-service slate of officers to the top positions. The new commodore is Lt.-Cmdr. Ron Hayes and, showing the trend to tri-service thinking, the members voted an army dentist, Major John Eadon, as their vice-commodore. Lieut. William "Dusty" Rhodes, RCN, is the new rear-commodore and the fleet captain is Lt.-Cmdr. Don Ross.

Others serving on the new executive are: Small boat fleet captain, Mel Steffens; secretary, Petty Officer Pat Burch, RCNR; treasurer, Fred Thompson; house chairman, Paul Jensen; foreshore chairman, Jack Stacey; entertainment chairman, Ray Parsons, and member-at-large, Eric Gravenor.

Magician To Spread Gospel

Andre Cole, a U.S. campus crusader who combines magic with a gospel message, will perform in the Education Arts Building auditorium at the University of Victoria Friday at noon.

He will also appear at a meeting sponsored by the Christian Businessmen's Committee International at Lansdowne Junior Secondary School at 7:30 p.m. Friday.

"Mr. Cole is recognized in the States as an outstanding magician," John Tisdalle, chairman of the Victoria committee said. "He is also an ardent crusader for Christ.

"After putting on a display of magic, he says 'That is just trickery, but Christianity is the living truth.' In this way he appeals to young people everywhere."

ISLAND ROUNDUP

Shell Plugs Second Hole

Shell Canada's second offshore exploratory well has been plugged and abandoned and the oil drilling vessel SEDCO 135-F is in Port Alberni harbor for modifications.

From its drilling site some 15 miles off Tofino, the rig was towed at the weekend by support vessels Gulf Joan, Canadian Tide and Min Tide, and moored in the Inlet at Port Alberni.

Crews from Victoria Machinery Depot, which built the rig, are at work on scows and the rig's pontoons, where they will strip off some of the original fairing gear and replace it with newly designed equipment.

The fairing mechanism controls the vessel's lateral position when on site, consisting of guides for nine heavy anchor chains and windlasses to raise and lower the anchors.

Southeastern Commonwealth Drilling Co. Victoria manager Wallace Pounds said the task, entailing nine pieces of prefabricated structure, should be completed in a week to 10 days, or before Oct. 27.

Object of the work is to speed up the anchoring procedure, he said.

There has been no overall cost estimate of the work, but lost drilling time is estimated to be worth about $10,000 per day.

The towing vessels were reported to have had a tricky job manoeuvring the $10 million rig up Alberni Inlet and through Sproat Narrows a few miles west of Port Alberni.

NORTH COWICHAN — Coun. John Cannon said Wednesday he will be seeking re-election to municipal council in December.

He is completing his second term on council and said his platform will again be based on increased recreational facilities for the district and reorganization of the municipal fire departments.

Mr. Cannon is chairman of the joint city-municipal pioneer park committee and chairman of North Cowichan fire prevention committee.

Coun. Margaret Robertson has previously indicated she will be running again and Coun. Reg Clegg has intimated his retirement after eight years on council.

★ ★ ★

NORTH COWICHAN — Municipal council Wednesday rejected a departmen of transport invitation for it to lease Chemainus government wharf.

Coun. Gerry Smith said: "It would be a burden and a headache."

The department said the wharf could be leased for a $1 a year plus 15 per cent of the gross revenue.

Ten municipalities in B.C. lease and supervise government wharves and the service is appreciated by local residents and the government.

Reeve Donald Morton said: "We need more information or we might be sticking our necks out."

A 35-year-old man was committed to Vancouver Riverview Mental Hospital Wednesday after holding his estranged wife, their two young children and his wife's relatives at gunpoint overnight in their house on Brown Street, Alberni.

Theri ordeal ended about 11 a.m. when the man permitted them to walk out unharmed and surrendered without a struggle to RCMP officers who had entered the house.

He was taken to police headquarters and then flown to Vancouver in an RCMP Victoria-based amphibian aircraft.

His name is being witheld.

CHEMAINUS — A ratepayers' letter asked municipal council Wednesday to seek a solution to the pollution problem here.

They said the pollution is caused by fly ash from the local sawmill of MacMillan, Bloedel Ltd.

Reeve Donald Morton said the municipal health inspector Douglas Roe is currently having talks with the company management.

He hoped that as a result the company will take some action.

Coronary Care Unit 'Real Asset'

A $3,600 coronary care centre will be established at Resthaven Hospital.

The centre was made possible mainly through the assistance of the hospital women's auxiliary.

Royal Jubilee and St. Joseph's Hospitals are also each planning four-bed coronary care units with funds raised by the Victoria Kiwanis Club.

T. J. Bradley, hospital administrator for Resthaven, said the centre will be a real asset to the hospital.

HIGH RATIO

"We have a high ratio of elderly people living in our area and we want to give them the best possible treatment when they come in with heart trouble," he said.

The portable equipment has been set up in a special ward of Resthaven.

It involves monitors that sound an alarm within seconds if a patient's heart acts abnormally.

Mrs. Charles Tunner, president of the women's auxiliary, said most of the money for the centre was raised at a tea last spring.

Meanwhile, Resthaven Hospital Board has decided to admit the press at its meetings.

The next meeting of the board will be at 3 p.m., Nov. 23.

BROAD-MINDED residents of Salt Spring Island are reported to be responding favorably to veteran cabaret performer Sybile Van Dack, and accompanist Lance Kennedy who have act described as "racy" at Vesuvius.

They Can Take It Racy On Salt Spring Island

By ED GOULD

"What the devil are you doing in a place like this?" a show business agent from Victoria recently asked International cabaret performer Sybile Van Dack of Vesuvius, Salt Spring Island.

"He couldn't believe that I actually chose to live here," Mrs. Van Dack said.

Now 42, but still beautiful and with the figure of a girl in her teens, Mrs. Van Dack and husband Hal, a professional photographer, operate Arbutus Court Motel at Vesuvius.

"I more or less retired from the entertainment business," Mrs. Van Dack said. "But I still like to come out and do the occasional show once in a while."

"We came here from Melbourne and before that we lived in Perth, Western Australia," Mr. Van Dack said.

●

"But the Australian weather —eight months of solid rain— drove us up the wall."

That wasn't all that was "up the wall" according to the couple.

"The walls in our home were always covered with tree frogs," Mrs. Van Dack said, "along with plagues of moths, flying ants and fleas.

"When we left the Aussies told us we'd never be able to swim or even fish if we came to Canada. We swim more now than we ever did over there."

The Van Dacks explained how Australian beaches are patrolled by spotters in planes, whistles, flags and beach boys to keep watch for sharks.

"That's about all Australians really work at," Mr. Van Dack said. "They really enjoy ordering people out of the water."

He worked for RAF public relations as a photographer during the war and in Australia for the Department of Agriculture.

●

The Van Dacks met in England after the war where Sybile sang and danced for such famous orchestras as Stanley Black, Oscar Rabin and Felix Mendlesohn.

In Australia she worked for a short while with Rolf Harris, the composer of Tie Me Kangaroo Down Sport.

The couple met when Mr. Van Dack came backstage to take some publicity shots after a variety show.

"The chorus girls were all half nude so he came back again for another look" Mrs. Van Dack smiled.

It's a long hop from show business to running a motel, but there are comparisons.

"We spent a lot of time in motels and kitchens, always on the move," Mr. Van Dack said. "Then we owned our own cabaret outside Melbourne before a 50-mile wide brush fire wiped us out at the beginning of the season."

Mrs. Van Dack would like to do more local performances, especially now that she is reassured that her racy act won't antagonize the mainly elderly audiences.

●

"I was surprised and pleased that so many women came up and told me they liked my dancing and singing. In Australia the women were very hostile."

She's had difficulty getting a good piano accompanist. "There's plenty of work here because there's so little organized talent," she said. "And it makes a nice change from the motel business."

Duncan Annexation Bid Backed by Businessmen

DUNCAN—Ald. Hamish Mutter said Wednesday it was not an adverse health report which made the city move toward extending its boundaries into unorganized territories.

But he said: "I'm quite sure we can put in sewerage at the same cost as in the city and as the demand increases so will the services."

He was addressing the Duncan Chamber of Commerce which subsequently went on record in favor of the annexation of unorganized territory south to Bench Road and including parts of Cowichan Bay and Koksilah.

Ald. Mutter said the city has 700 acres and a successful vote Nov. 4 would add 2,300 acres.

WORKABLE

He said "This would be a workable unit and the reason we are making this move is because we feel our services should be shared."

Ald. Mutter said increases in taxes in the unorganized area would be "negligible," and assessments could not be increased more than five per cent in any one year.

CHEMAINUS GIVEN KIN BEACH PARK

CHEMAINUS — The now defunct Chemainus Kinsmen Club has handed over title of Kin Beach Park to municipal council.

Only stipulation was that the seaside park continue to bear the Kinsmen name.

Reeve Donald Morton said it was like presiding at a funeral when a club ceased to operate, and he paid tribute to the years of community work done by Chemainus Kinsmen.

He said council gratefully accepted the park property which is valued at about $25,000.

HE GIVES AWAY GRAND PRIZES

Is there something you want to know? Do you want to win a set of valuable books or other instructive prizes? Then ask Andy.

Andy will answer questions submitted by child readers and those who submit the questions he selects to answer will receive worthwhile prizes.

The youngster who asks the first question answered each day receives a 20-volume set of the World Book Encyclopedia and of the second question a World Book Atlas or Globe.

Andy sends a complete, 20-volume set of the World Book Encyclopedia to Gaye Smith, age 10, of Eclectic, Alabama, for her question:

What are jungles like?

There are two sensible ways to admire the beauty of a jungle. You can take a plane or helicopter ride above its vivid green trees. Or you can watch its brilliant lower levels unfold in a colored movie. Exploring a lush jungle at ground level is always risky and never comfortable.

The word "jangal" belongs to the people of India. It means a waste stretch of land that is not farmed or cultivated. In India the soil is rich, the climate is hot and every year the rainy monsoon season drenches deep into the ground. The plant world loves these conditions. You can almost watch the thriving greenery growing. In just a few days, a patch of bare, uncultivated jangal is a tangle of vines and grasses, new shrubs and sprouting trees. Britain, who shared India for a time, borrowed the word "jangal" and changed it to "jungle."

That is how the word "jungle" crept into our language. We use it to mean a tangle of lush, tropical vegetation. There are jungles in South and Central America, in the East Indies and Africa and in parts of southern Asia. Each of these jungles has certain trees and plants of its own. And different animals populate the jungles of the Old World and the New. The dense greenery is bound to attract a lot of animal life and the crowded creatures might fight each other to survive. When man enters the jungle, they may attack him also.

Seen from an airplane, a jungle looks like a thick green carpet tufted with spreading pom-poms. The carpet is really the tops of the crowded jungle trees. The tufts are the spreading crowns that rise above the average trees. This bird's-eye-view is merely the roof of the jungle, hiding the teeming life inside. At ground level, you are faced with a dense wall of greenery that looks impossible to pass.

Richest Soil

You need a guide to find a path that has been hacked through the tangled foliage and a guide to protect you from the perils that lurk there. When you enter the path, the jungle seems very dark. The dense roof of treetops shuts out the sunshine. Gradually your eyes get used to the gloom and you see low growing shrubs on the ground mixed with mosses and feathery ferns. The bushes and branches above are festooned with twining vines. The greenery is bedecked with gaudy flowers and bouquets of delicate orchids that bloom from their perches high in the boughs. The trees are tropical evergreens with huge, thick leaves polished with waxy gloss.

The crowded green mansion is a noisy place. Congregations of monkey-type animals swing and swoop through the boughs, chattering and screaming. Birds clothed in outrageous colors squawk and shriek. Their raucous voices warn of boa constrictors and other snakes that hunt in silence. In the Old World jungles, hungry leopards lurk in the trees and tigers prowl on the ground. In New World jungles, the king of the prowling cats is the jaguar. And in every jungle there are swarms of hungry insects, big bugs and small bugs, flying bugs and crawling bugs.

Not many travelers visit these tangled wastelands and most of us think that there are not many jungles left to visit. But this is not true. It is estimated that jungles cover one third of all the earth's usable land. If all this tangled greenery could be stripped away, the hungry human population would have an extra 15 million square miles of farmland And cleared jungle land is just about the richest soil in the world.

Andy sends a 14" World Book Globe to Ann Kyte, age 13, of Burbank, South Dakota, for her question:

What is an air pocket?

The term air pocket dates back to the early days of aviation. In those days, the primitive planes flew slower and lower than our modern mighty planes. A slight change in altitude or weather conditions was a major problem for them. Another problem was especially hazardous because it was unpredictable. Once in awhile a plane flying in apparently calm weather would take a sudden dip. Meteorologists and aviation experts assumed that the little plane had crossed an invisible current of light air. The plane suddenly lost altitude because the normal air pressure needed to support its wings was suddenly reduced. It seemed natural to call this thinner hole in the atmosphere an air pocket. When a small, low-flying plane struck one of these so-called air pockets above a mountain, the resulting dip could mean disaster.

Our modern giants prefer to fly above the hazards of the weather. But the so-called air pocket has not disappeared. In fact, its character is more menacing, even though we know more about it. It is now thought to be a gusty column of turbulent, tangled currents tossing wildly in all directions. Plane instruments can detect such a pocket of turbulence ahead and passengers are ordered to fasten their seat belts for the duration of a bumpy trip. Sometimes an unexpected plunge into atmospheric turbulence is too much even for a moder plane. And more research in both meteorology and aviation is needed to master the problem.

Trimaran Voyage Whale of a Tale For Young Couple

By DAVE MacDONALD

MONTREAL (CP) — A tall, bearded Yugoslav-Canadian sailed an unusual boat into Expo 67's marina this week with a whale of a tale to tell about an 8,000-mile sea voyage that started more than a year ago in Vancouver.

With Mario Lovricic, 36, on the storm — and politics-buffeted trip was his petite, dark-haired wife Freda, 36, a bluenose originally from Shelburne, N.S., making her very first venture on the high seas.

Bent double inside the shallow cockpit of the low-slung three-hulled trimaran Espero, they talked excitedly about jousts with 65-mile-an-hour gales off the coast of Oregon and six suspense-filled days in dank dungeons of one of Castro's jails.

And of their plans to return to the home in Oakville, Ont., they haven't seen for five years.

"We left Vancouver 13 months and 17 days ago," said Mario, "on Sept. 7, 1966, to be exact, and took this little boat down the Pacific Coast, through the Panama Canal, the Caribbean and the Atlantic. We didn't run aground until we tried to dock at Marsoui, on the Gaspe Peninsula.

"That cost us two weeks and other delays added four so we're at Expo six weeks behing schedule."

Saved for Trip

It started after the wandering coulle saved enogh money from two years of living in Whitehorse, Yukon, where Mario worked as an electronics engineer in a radio station, to go down to Vancouver and spend $5,000 building their green-and-white, single-master vessel.

"We budgeted $2 a day, in fact spent about $2.50 a day and did the whole trip for $1,200,55 he said.

"Two rudders broke along the way, because their design was too light, but the vessel rode over the seas like a bird. It's the boat of the future."

During their trip down the Pacific Coast they were:

—Blasted by a two-day, 65-mile-an-hour gale off Oregon that broke one rudder;

—Driven 120 miles off-course by fierce winds in the Gulf of Tehuanepec, off the coast of Mexico;

—Tossed about for 8½ days in the Gulf of Fonseca, off the coasts of Honduras, Guatemala and San Salvador by the Papagaoi winds, called after a local seabird and "feared by every mariner who sails those waters."

Landed in Jail

In the Panama Canal they did a favor to U.S. citizen Sergio Hanuschak, 35, who spends all his time flitch-hiking on ocean-going sailing craft, and ended up in Cuban jails as a result.

"After crossing the Caribbean we hove to off the tiny island of Cayonguano, south of Cuba, to sleep the night," said Mario.

"In the morning, as we tried to sail off we were signalled to come ashore by the staff of a Cuban light-house on the island.

"They wanted to know what we were doing in these waters and the presence of an American did not go down well at all.

"A Russian-built patrol torpedo boat came out from the mainland and took us ashore where they joiled us incommunicado for six days, all in separate cells.

"I was interrogated daily in Spanish, a language I speak fairly well. I also speak Yugoslavian, Italian, English, French and Esperanto.

"They refused to let us phone the Canadian embassy until the day we were released, then, very strangely, they put us up for 10 days in a swank hotel along with film stars and the Korean and Polish ambassadors."

After an uneventful trip up to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, their nine-horsepower auxiliary engine broke down and they rammed some rocks at Marsoui.

Repairs finished and a new motor installed, they sailed up the St. Lawrence River to Expo under power the whole way.

"I'm going to build another Trimaran, Sspero II, which will be 35 feet long instead of the present one's 25 feet and sail it clear around the world," said Mario. "It'll be big enough for four."

Halloween Collection Can Drive

Sunday schools throughout Vancouver Island are preparing for the annual Halloween Collection Can drive to aid starving children in Korea and South Vietnam.

"The need is urgent," says Mrs. W. W. McGill, Vancouver Island representative of the Save the Children Fund. "We hope boys and girls in this land of plenty, and their parents as well, will give us all the support they can."

All persons interested in helping the Halloween Collection Can Drive may contact Mrs. McGill at 3441 Mayfair Drive, or phone 384-4803.

Beware Cat-Napper, Warns Cat-Fancier

TORONTO (CP)—If you buy an expensive cat don't ever let it out of the house, says cat fancier Nancy Sutherland.

"Most people know an expensive breed of cat when they see it now and they are not above picking it up for themselves," she said in an interview.

She was told "You'll never find a man crazy enough to marry you," when her friends discovered she wanted a home furnished mainly with cats.

Her friends were wrong. Hugh Sutherland, formerly Canada's top racing driver and a mining engineer and geologist, doesn't mind how many cats Nancy has around their home in nearby King.

At last count there were 72—just enough to keep the six dogs in line.

Mrs. Sutherland decided to sell some of the overflow at home in a cat boutique in downtown Toronto.

Called Pussies Galore, it has for sale some of the aristocrats of the feline world, including the Himalayans, a new breed developed from Siamese and Persian strains, which retail for up to $150 each.

Expensive cats have expensive tastes, including jewelled collars with matching leads for walking your pet.

"Someone has placed an order for a margay—a miniature ocelot—and I'm getting two," said Mrs. Sutherland. "It'll be big enough for four."

Margays sell for about $350.

Gov'ts Probe Dosco Deal

Ottawa, Nova Scotia Check to See If Subsidy Agreements Breached

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson piedged the federal government's help "in every appropriate way" Wednesday to assist Nova Scotia in finding a solution to the planned closing of steel mill operations in Sydney.

But, Mr. Pearson told the Commons, initial responsibility rests with the province in a case, such as this, in which a particular company in a particular province is involved.

Dominion Steel and Coal Corp., a subsidiary of Hawker Siddeley of the United Kingdom, advised the government last Thursday it plans to terminate its steel mill operations as uneconomic.

Justice Minister Trudeau said in the Commons his department is seeking to determine whether Dosco breached an agreement it made last spring with the Nova Scotia and federal governments. The two governments put $6,000,000 into new bulk-handling facilities at Sydney with the understanding this amount would be matched by Dosco investment in its plant.

AGREEMENT EXPLICIT

Health Minister MacEachen told the Commons Monday the agreement is explicit on the point that that Dosco was to match the $6,000,000 government investment with an equivalent investment in the steel mill.

He said there is a provision in the agreement that if there is any doubt about it being carried out, arbitration will be conducted by the chief justice of Nova Scotia.

(Nova Scotia's Deputy Attorney-General John A. Y. MacDonald said his department is also investigating Dominion Steel and Coal Corp. financial agreements with Ottawa and Nova Scotia to determine whether any contracts have been broken.)

Forestry Minister Sauve, minister responsible for redevelopment of marginal areas, said in a CBC-TV interview later Wednesday that he and the government had been working for a year on plans to revitalize Cape Breton and the eastern mainland of Nova Scotia. But he had no word of Dosco's closing until last Thursday.

Mr. Sauve did not elaborate, but said creation of a deep-sea port on the Strait of Canso is being considered, to spark industrial development.

Some new industries already are growing in the area and others are envisaged, including the production of heavy water for Canadian-built nuclear power generators.

The Dosco question was first priority in Wednesday's question period in the Commons.

Interim Opposition Leader Starr asked whether the federal government would take the lead. Mr. Pearson said Premier Smith's Progressive Conservative government in Nova Scotia "has taken the responsibility and we are co-operating."

"We will co-operate with the province in every appropriate way to assist in finding a solution," the prime minister added.

Mr. Starr asked: "Does not the prime minister think that unemployment in Canada is a national responsibility, particularly as this situation will create a great deal of unemployment in that part of the country?"

RULED OUT OF ORDER

Mr. Pearson did not reply, and Speaker Lucien Pamoureux said the question was out of order.

Replying to Robert Muir (PC—Cape Breton North and Victoria), Mr. Pearson said he had no knowledge of a proposition by a Herbert B. Noble of Toronto to purchase the Sydney steel mill.

Health Minister MacEachen, Nova Scotia's representative in the cabinet, said there were overtures by Japanese interests, being considered by the provincial government, but these were entirely tentative and exploratory.

He said he had no other propositions except a telephone call on which he did not elaborate. The caller's idea was "too infirm" to justify any speculation.

HARD WINTER FOR SYDNEY

SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — "It's back to what it's always been — another handout for Dosco."

This was the bitter comment by one Sydney resident on the province's proposal to underwrite the loss incurred by the Dominion Steel and Coal Corp. for four months if it would continue operation of its steel plant here at full force until mid-May 1968.

Dosco plans to close out the plant by next April 30.

One former steelworker said some people have gone "off the deep end" but these were mainly businessmen who were 'panicky' because they had large investments to lose.

Some workers feel a takeover by new owners would bring a solution to the chronic problem of outdated equipment.

"We've got the men here willing to work but the equipment is outdated," one said.

The hope for a takeover by new owners is combined with a feeling that the government can't let a whole city, and with it a whole island, die.

Nearly everyone agrees that the plant will operate at least through the winter. But behind the hopeful talk of new owners or government action is doubt that it can be carried off.

"It's a big problem," said Mrs. Charlie Legge, the wife of a steelworker. "That's what the men are worried sick about."

She and her husband own their home here but are planning to write to Australia to see if there is work in steel mills there. "We'd just have to board the house up and leave it," that's all."

The lack of confidence in the future was also evident in the business community.

Ted Tracy, a barber, said Tuesdays usually are busy, but this Tuesday had been the quietest one he could recall.

"But that's the usual reaction," he said. "It's the same after layoffs at the plant. Unti they see what's going to happen they stop spending on the little things, anything that can be put off. I expect it will be a hard winter here for all of us."

FAILED TO DIVERSIFY

Feeling against Dosco was generally bitter, he said. Tons of structural steel were used for construction in the Maritimes but Dosco had failed to diversify the plant to take advantage of such markets.

A part-time real estate salesman here said concern about the area's future had been growing since the plant began laying men off last spring. No one was buying houses here in the last few months.

The steelworkers and the city face a crisis but they are facing it calmly and sadly.

Evan Lloyd, director of the Cape Breton Tourist Association, said: "The steelworkers are a hardy lot. They have faced a lot of problems and overcame them."

City Sailors To Graduate As Petty Officers

Two Victoria sailors are among the 11 technical apprentices due to graduate as petty officers from the Fleet School at CFB Esquimalt Oct. 27.

The local graduates are leading seamen A. J. Pickard, 1253 Simon Road and R. J. Lavergne, 338 St. James Street.

The ceremonies mark the end of a 39-month course which includes theory and practical work in marine engineering and six-month practical experience at sea on destroyers. The sailors will graduate as marine engine technicians or hull technicians.

A total of 26 started the course in July, 1964. Losses were due to the strenuous academic program, the high degree of skill demanded in the workshops and the high physical and moral standards which had to be met.

U.S. Jet Fighter For Latin-Americans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The state department said Wednesday the United States is ready to authorize sale of supersonic military planes to Latin American countries.

Department officials insisted that this did not represent a change of policy, although at numerous news conferences official opposition had been expressed to acquisition of such planes by Latin American countries from European countries, notably France.

Although state department officials denied it, Latin Americans construed the latest development as a compromise in the policy which was expressed numerous times, in response to questions, about the purchase of French Mirage planes by Peru.

The policy was that Latin American countries should avoid outlays for sophisticated armament, reduce arms expenditures wherever possible, and divert as much of budgetary expense as possible to economic development.

MOST 'EXHIBITIONISTS'

True Hippie Rare Mayor Tells Panel

The true hippies are a small minority of young intellectuals who have broken with conventional society. Mayor Hugh Stephen said Wednesday night.

"The majority are a group of exhibitionists who like to dress up and draw attention to themselves. They are part of the spirit of revolt which occurs in every generation."

"We would be foolish if we paid too much attention to them," he said.

The mayor was speaking at a panel discussion in First United Church Hall organized by the Victoria Presbyterial, United Church Women.

He spoke of meeting hippie groups at the City Hall. They told him of their problems and he told them he grew up in the First World War, started work during the Depression and lived through the Second World War.

HAD CHALLENGE

The hippies replied: "You had a challenge—we have no challenge."

Mayor Stephen was one of a panel of speakers who answered questions from the United Church Women on the subject of Social Action, Church and Community.

Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, president of the University of Victoria, was in the chair and the panel also included Rev. Patrick Ratchford of the Roman Catholic diocese of Victoria; Rev. Dr. Samuel Parsons, president, Greater Victoria Council of Churches; and Garth Homer, executive director, Community Welfare Council.

Mayor Stephen was asked if he thought British Columbia's provincial government is doing enough for social welfare.

"The present government is very often faulted as being more interested in things than people," the mayor replied. "But sometimes you have to do things before you can help people.

"There are priorities such as road-making and dam-building. Until our province is economically able to sustain the load of its growing liabilities, it cannot increase assistance to welfare and education."

Mr. Homer said all social welfare programs should be evaluated in co-operation with the schools and the churches.

CHANGING PICTURE

"Welfare workers are directly responsible to the public," he said, "and the picture is constantly changing. I believe we should work closely with the churches in trying to assess the needs of the people."

Dr. Parsons said Mr. Homer is doing "a tremendous job" of co-ordinating welfare services and volunteers wishing to undertake social work should consult with him.

"How are the churches working together to meet the needs of the community?" was another question addressed to the panel.

Dr. Parsons said the clergy of most denominations in Victoria have shown a most co-operative spirit in meeting together at the church level.

"But the real test of the ecumenical spirit is how much we are prepared to co-operate at the practical welfare level."

Dr. Parsons said the Greater Victoria Council of Churches has grown to the point where a full-time executive officer is needed to direct its activities.

"We shall ask all the churches represented on the council to work together on this matter. It will mean more expense and more effort for us all, and this will be the real test of our ecumenical spirit."

Dr. Parsons said Most Rev. Remi De Roo, Roman Catholic Bishop of Victoria, has given a strong lead in this direction by meeting with the clergy of many churches to discuss current social problems.

"We are most fortunate in having such a man in our community," said Mayor Stephen.

To the question "What can we do for persons coming out of jail?" Dr. Parsons said the John Howard Society and other organizations do great work in this field, but the churches could help them do more.

"The basic problem is motivation," he said. "We need to develop a real compassion and love for persons coming out of jail, so that we have a real desire to help them get back on their feet."

Mr. Homer of the Welfare Council was questioned concerning a statement that psychedelic drugs are a short-cut to maturity.

"There is no short cut to maturity," he replied. "I believe maturity is achieved by day-to-day experience, not by drugs. We as a community must provide an alternative to these attempted short cuts.

"Some of the hippies say they are tired of this dog-eat-dog life. They are trying to escape from it and I believe we should try to understand them."

To a question on international relations, Dr. Taylor said students from many countries are now working at the University of Victoria.

"It would be a great help if you would invite them into your homes," he said. "We want to do something for them because they are doing so much for us.

"Our students derive great benefit from meeting with students from other lands and learning of their various cultures."

CYC CHIEF

No Fun Year For Nation's Poor People

SASKATOON (CP) — Alan Clarke, executive director of the Company of Young Canadians, says Canadians should do more than just talk about existing social conditions.

He told the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Parks and Recreation Association, "It was not a fun year for the Canadian Indian, the Negro in Nova Scotia, for families trapped in urban slums or for the more than 1,000,000 adult Canadians who are functionally illiterate."

Canada is both a have and a have-not country in which the ordinary Canadian often is the victim, rather than the agent or beneficiary, of social progress, he said.

Many young people are starting to act to supplement the talk about conditions. They are joining groups such as the CYC to work in many areas to bring about changes.

Commenting on reaction to what is being described as "beards and long hairs" in the CYC, Clarke said "preliminary surveys indicate that the per capita number of beards and long hairs in the CYC is far less than in the photograph of the Fathers of Confederation taken at Charlottetown."

He asked Canadians over 25 to take a close look at existing organizations to make sure their work is fulfilling its objectives.

"And one other thing that the older generation has to do is to begin to respect and learn from the differences in people in this country."

Chamber Backs Amalgamation

The Sidney and North Saanich Chamber of Commerce Tuesday voted unanimously in favor of amalgamating with North Saanich.

Bill Larnick, president, said members felt that the best way to preserve the rural amenities of North Saanich and the commercial aspects of Sidney, was to amalgamate.

Members felt that a united council could keep the two areas as they are today.

They also felt that in the long run, it would be in the best interest economically of ratepayers for the two districts to unite.

HOME GARDEN

Preserving Begonias For Another Year

By HILDA BEASTALL

Tuberous begonias last amazingly well here through most of October.

Perhaps the reason lies in their being used in planters under wide eaves on the north side of homes.

Hilda

In this position the begonias benefit from the moist air around them in October, without receiving drenching rainstorms.

Before long it will be necessary for them to make way for other plants to give color in winter and early spring.

These few notes may help you to preserve the tubers for another year.

Lift the begonias from the planters and shake off some of the loose soil.

Pack the plants side by side in shallow wooden boxes to keep them for a week or two in a shed, basement or garage.

Half open buds and open flowers should be used for table decorations floating in shallow platters.

Keeping the colors in separate boxes, labelled, will ensure that next year's arrangement will be just as you want it colorwise.

As the leaves and stems fall from the plants in the boxes, they must be removed before they turn mouldy. When all have fallen the tubers should be shaken free of soil and gently cleaned with the fingers.

Store the tubers with the crown uppermost, in a shallow wooden flat, keeping it for winter in a cool, frost-free place.

Inspection of these tubers, and indeed of all roots being stored under cover for winter, should be a routine job every two weeks or so until the time comes to start them again into growth.

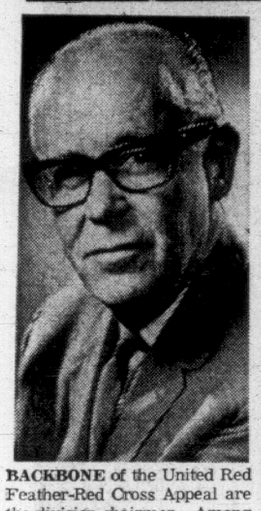
Grits, Tories Sure They'll Wow N.B.

By IAN DONALDSON

FREDERICTON (CP) — Louis J. Robichaud and J. C. Van Horne have displayed at least two things in common during the campaign for the next Monday's New Brunswick election.



BACKBONE of the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal are the division chairmen. Among the busy ones are J. R. "Ron" McKenzie, top, who in his second year with United Appeal, is chairman of the general firms division. Centre is Gordon B. Murphy, another two-year man, who is vice-chairman of the corporation and executives division. Below is L. J. Glassford, who in his first year with United Appeal and is chairman of the corporation employees division.

Both the Liberal premier and the Progressive Conservative leader have waged tireless campaigns and both are openly confident of smashing victory.

The premier, who will be 42 two days before the election, and the 45-year-old Opposition leader have been campaigning from early morning until late at night for the last three weeks.

Both have used the word "crushing" to describe their predicted victories.

Mr. Robichaud has been predicting for weeks that his Liberals, in office since turning out the Conservatives in 1960, would win 40 of the 58 seats. But in the last two or three days he has been saying he will win more than 40 seats and his estimate has reached as high as 46.

PREDICTS TOTAL VICTORY

Mr. Van Horne, a former PC member of Parliament, has publicly predicted the annihilation of the Liberals with a sweep of all 58 seats by his party.

Six new seats were added to the legislature by redistribution this year. The Liberals won 32 seats and the PCs 20 in the last election in 1963.

The standing at dissolution was Liberals 31, PCs 20, vacant one.

About 312,000 will be eligible to vote Monday with polls open from 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. ADT.

With only three NDP candidates in the field and with the Liberals and PCs offering full slates of 58 apiece, the campaign has been virtually a straight two-party fight between the Liberals, seeking a third straight mandate, and the Conservatives, hoping to form the government for the first time since Mr. Robichaud toppled the Hugh John Flemming administration in 1960.

Both leaders have criss-crossed this province of 28,354 square miles speaking at two and more rallies a night, attending afternoon tea-and-biscuit affairs, hand-shaking it along main street and still finding time for countless television and radio addresses.

BITTER CAMPAIGN

The campaign has been bitter at times with both leaders accusing each other of uttering falsehoods.

They have promised sweeping programs—including more aid to education, more and better highways, job-producing industrial development programs and improved health and welfare benefits.

A continuing theme in the campaign has been the governments record during its seven years in office.

Mr. Robichaud says his government has been a responsible one and he promises "continued financial responsibility in carrying out his programs.". He says the PC promises would cost countless millions and at several rallies he has uncurled a roll of newspaper clippings—which he says represents promises made by Mr. Van Horne.

The clippings pasted together form a sheet of paper which by holding aloft the premier shows to be taller than his five-foot-five height.

Mr. Van Horne says the Liberal government "has set itself up as the master of the people.

"It has lost touch with the people in its determination to install a system of super-centralization and dictatorship," he says.

This is in reference to the government's Program of Equal Opportunity which has abolished county councils and given the province authority over major services.

Hotel's Lateness In Laying Charge Lessens Sentence

Raymond McCormick, 39, of 1279 Pembroke, Wednesday was sentenced to two months for obtaining food and lodgings by false pretenses.

McCormick pleaded guilty in central court Monday to running up a bill of $106 at the Empress Hotel last May and paying for it with a worthless cheque for $126, taking the $20 change in cash.

Magistrate Ostler handed down the relatively light sentence, saying he was "taking into consideration the unusual length of time it took for the complainant to lay the charge."

Mariner Swoops Past

Venus Data Gathered By U.S. Spacecraft

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) Mariner V skimmed within 2,480 miles of Venus at 10:34 a.m. PDT today on an atmosphere sampling mission similar to that of a Russian craft which parachuted a capsule to the planet's surface Wednesday.

Flight controllers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratories here said signals indicated all instruments on the U.S. craft were working and data was being recorded on tape for playback several hours later.

One of the key experiments—measuring atmospheric depth and density by distortion of radio waves—took place as the 540-pound craft swept behind Venus at a speed of 19,000 an hour shortly after its closest approach.

The tinkling tones of its radio carrier wave, which carries coded data signals, were interrupted as the craft was hidden from earth by the planet.

EXTREMELY HOT

Bending of the waves by Venus' cloudy atmosphere—which the Soviet Venus IV confirmed as mostly carbon dioxide and extremely hot—was expected to show the density of the atmosphere and how far it extends from the surface.

The signals stopped at 10:37 a.m. and resumed 23 minutes later.

During the flyby, instruments on Mariner V measured the amount of hydrogen and oxygen in the upper fringes of Venus' atmosphere. From this, U.S. scientists hoped to deduce the density of the heavier lower layer of carbon dioxide and thus check the accuracy of the Soviet craft's findings.

Strength of emissions from sunlight-excited atoms of hydrogen and oxygen was a measure of heat in the upper atmosphere. Scientists said they could calculate from this the heat on the surface, which Venus IV radioed was 536 degrees Fahrenheit.

Only hint of trouble came a few hours before the flyby when ground transmitters ran into a 30-minute delay in sending a backup signal to start the tape recorder. The recorder turned on automatically, however, and the mission went off as planned.

Estimates of the time it would take Mariner V to have its signals blacked out by Venus had ranged from 11 minutes to 26 minutes, depending upon the actual diameter of the planet.

NEW ABOLITION BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

OTTAWA (CP)—The Commons today gave first reading to a government bill which would limit the death penalty to persons who are convicted of murdering police officers or prison guards.

Solicitor-General Pennell said the bill for a five-year test period would limit capital punishment to slayers of prison guards and police.

Court Quashes Charges

By PAUL WILLIAMSON

Accused bank robber Carl Raymond had a few brief moments of freedom today after Magistrate William Ostler, on technicalities, threw out charges of armed robbery against Raymond and his wife.

Confusion reigned in the courtroom for a few moments, and a crowd converged in the adjacent hallway, everyone making suggestions of what to do next.

Raymond, 22, originally charged with the armed robbery of the Bank of Montreal at Fort and Richmond last Friday, was arrested again shortly after leaving the courtroom.

He has been re-charged and was to appear in court this afternoon.

WIFE FREE

At press time, the prosecutor's office had not yet decided whether to re-arrest Raymond's wife, 16-year-old Janet.

When Raymond appeared in court earlier, his wife was sitting in the front row with a policewoman, presumably waiting to be called herself.

Magistrate Ostler informed Raymond's counsel George Jones, appointed this morning by the legal aid society, he wished to read a statement with regard to the charge.

The charges against both the accused were contained on the same information which had been sworn before the court. Mrs. Raymond's case had been elevated from juvenile court Wednesday.

THREE REASONS

Magistrate Ostler "quashed the information" for three reasons.

He said the new charge against Mrs. Raymond was not the same as the original one laid in juvenile court.

He also said he would not accept an "information" (the legal document on which the charge is written) on which two people were charged with two different things.

His third reason was that it was not clear whether Mrs. Raymond was being charged as a principal in the crime, or as aiding and abetting.

When the magistrate pronounced the charges quashed, confusion took over.

Raymond, in the prisoner's box, appeared bewildered. When the court officer attempted to lead him back to the jail,

PEARKES TO ACCEPT ANOTHER EXTENSION?

PEARKES . . . in demand

OTTAWA—Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes is expected to remain in his post for another six months.

Mr. Pearkes, who was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia in 1960, is nearing the end of a second one-year extension of the regular five-year term.

It is understood he has been asked to remain for another six months and is expected to accept.

Mr. Pearkes' current term runs out at the end of the month.

A spokesman at Government House today said Mr. Pearkes would not make any comment on the report because any announcement must come from Ottawa "but they're still hoping to move at the end of the month."

WON'T 'INTERFERE'

Sask. Takes Over College Finances

REGINA (CP)—Premier Thatcher said Wednesday night the provincial government will assume direct financial control of the University of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Thatcher, in an address to the Potashville Education Association, said that while the government will financially control the university, "it will not interfere with internal operations."

The premier also announced Welfare Minister McIsaac has been handed the provincial education portfolio and the job of spearheading a new approach to educational finance which will involve more government control in all education spending.

He said changes would be made in the education act to help control costs at the local levels.

"We do not intend in any way to impinge on local autonomy," he explained. "But I must say we shall try to find far more practical financial controls over the power of school boards to spend provincial money."

On university spending, Mr. Thatcher said:

"In essence, the university will be obliged to make its financial requests to the legislature in the same manner as any other department. For example, they will have to request so much for salaries, so much for travelling and so much for new buildings."

He said the university today is fast becoming one of the government's largest spending departments.

This year, the government must find $28,000,00 for University of Saskatchewan and the campus population is growing at a rate of more than 1,200 students a year.

Authorities Fight Rash Of Anti-War Incidents

From Times News Services

A group of anti-war demonstrators tried to storm an induction centre in Chicago today in another of a series of incidents designed to build up sentiment against U.S. Vietnam involvement.

Chicago police repelled the would-be intruders at the induction centre door and arrested 11 males and seven females.

About 70 persons had been parading in front of the induction centre, just west of Chicago's Loop, when some of them broke ranks and tried to enter the building.

In Wisconsin and California University authorities have moved against student leaders of anti-war and anti-draft protests after demonstrators in Madison and Oakland clashed with police.

In Washington sources said the U.S Army may use paratroops to augment the Pentagon's civilian guard force in preventing disruption or worse in a planned massive anti-war demonstration Saturday.

University of Wisconsin officials moved to oust leaders of a campus anti-war sit-in Wednesday which was broken up by riot-trained Madison city police. At least 65 persons were injured in the melee.

Demonstrators discussed classroom strikes as a possible retaliatory measure. They were supported by several hundred sympathetic faculty members.

The demonstrators were protesting the presence of representatives of the Dow Chemical Co., manufacturer of napalm for the war in Vietnam, on campus to interview job applicants.

VIOLATE RULES

On the west coast, Arleigh Williams, dean of students at the University of California's Berkeley campus, said his office will charge at least 20 students with violating university rules in the on-campus anti-war rallies.

Anti-draft demonstrators continued their protest at the besieged Oakland army induction centre and the arrest of 91 squatters at the door brought to more than 300 the numbers of persons seized since the protest began.

Governor Ronald Reagan, at the national governors conference on a cruise to the Virgin Islands, warned that if demonstrators step up their protest, California could use the national guard.

PORTLAND POLICE CUT ANTI-DRAFT 'CHAIN-IN'

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Six draft protesters chained themselves to the entrance of the Selective Service Office in Portland today.

They blocked the entrance for 45 minutes until police used metal cutters to snap the thick chains.

The protestors were dragged by their feet to a waiting police wagon chanting "Hell no, we won't go".

They were dragged about 30 feet with their heads against the ground.

They were charged with disorderly conduct.

They were all Reed College students, police said.

By ROBERT EVANS

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Russia's Venus IV space capsule sent back messages indicating that the surface of Venus consists of solid rocks like those on earth, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today.

Dr. Vladimir Siforov, a prominent Soviet specialist on long-distance communications, told Tass that radioed reports as Venus reached the planet Wednesday indicated the surface rocks have physical properties like the silicates of the earth.

Before the landing there had been many theories about the surface hidden behind the shroud of clouds that veil Venus.

Experts' ideas about the surface ranged from a scorching inferno of dusty desert without a scrap of moisture to a waste covered with ice and water.

Tass quoted Siforov as saying the report on a rocvy surface needed checking by an automatic station which would transmit information from the surface of the planet.

The Russians have not indicated the life expectancy of the instruments aboard the automatic station, but they did say the station was not equipped for picture transmission.

Members of the Soviet design team hoped the epoch-making Venus IV would discover life on the mystery planet, it was reported today.

But information relayed back during the instrument capsule's 90-minute float-down through the thick clouds around the planet indicated life is unlikely to exist there.

As it descended by parachute, the package reported there was no free oxygen in any significant quantity in the Venusian atmosphere and that the surface temperature was 530 Fahrenheit.

It also revealed that the main component of the planet's atmosphere was carbon dioxide and that pressure on the surface was up to 15 times that of the earth's atmosphere, all of which virtually precludes any form of life as it is known on earth.

HOW WE IGNORE OUR OLD FOLKS

B.C. Offers Good Plan But Alberta Offers Cash

By PETE LOUDON

If you're broke and old in British Columbia, the best thing you can do for yourself is move to Alberta.

If you become so infirm in B.C. that you must enter a private hospital, the welfare department will pay $230 on your behalf, (including your pension cheque).

This is so far below the $270 that private hospitals say is required, you will have a hard time finding a bed.

In Alberta the private hospital would be paid $375 on your behalf.

British Columbia has a plan for extension of $1 per day care for the incapacitated elderly who need bed care—but it's a long way from reality. This final chapter in a series tells how a neighbor province met a similar emergency without waiting for the community conscience to meet the need.

You would pay $2.50 a day out of your old age pension and have money left over. The Alberta government would pay a $10 per day subsidy to make up the balance of your bill.

In B.C., your pension cheque would be forfeited and it would meet the first $105 of the $230 payment. Ten per cent of the balance would be recovered by the province from the municipality you live in. Fifty per cent would be indirectly paid by the federal government.

In B.C., the province actually pays only $50 of your bill—about 21 per cent. The federal government would pay 75 per cent.

This is great for conserving provincial revenues to meet things like debt charges of hydro developments. But it works out tough for the patient.

SO ALANO LOOKS TO UNITED APPEAL

Spending Spree Over When Sober

By TED GASKELL

"We'd be broke by spring if it weren't for United Appeal," a member of the Alano Club said today," and scores of reformed alcoholics would have lost their haven from the temptation of liquor."

With the $4,000 from the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal not only can the club stay open but it can brighten its fading interior and make it attractive to the men and women who use its facilities, not only as a temperance social club but to meet and discuss problems with their fellows.

The Alano Club has been operating, and paying its own way, for about 18 years, in its second floor quarters at Broad and Johnson.

Now it has fallen on hard times.

It takes about $400 a month for rent and other overhead. Less than 100 members pay their $2 a month dues and the club's savings, amassed during years of successful bingos and other functions, are dwindling.

During a tour of the club with its billiard room, games room, meeting room, lounge and coffee shop, the member said "the club is important to the reformed alcoholic. Once he has given up liquor he must have somewhere to go. It's no use him going to the cocktail bars and clubs with friends for his social life. He can't sit and drink ginger ale while his friends take liquor."

At least not at first. He might later when he becomes self-sufficient and doesn't need the Alano Club any more.

But the Alano Club is a "halfway point". Here the reformed alcoholic can meet others with the same problem. He can talk out his fears and worries, have a snack or a sandwich, a cup of coffee or a milk shake without being exposed to liquor in any way.

No one who has been drinking is allowed in the club. "We'll accept people with hangovers if they are members, but this isn't a sobering-up service," said the member.

Before anyone can join he—or she, there are as many women as men among the members—must be a member of Alcoholics Anonymous and must have been sober for a month.

Although this is a stipulation, the club is not connected in any way with AA, although it does rent out its small meeting room to the local groups for their meetings.

The member told this story:

"I came here in 1951. I had money but no job, no self confidence or self respect and I was not welcome at home. But I have stayed sober, returned to my work and family and recently I retired."

"Thousands of people have been helped here. We get about 50 members a day dropping in to talk or for coffee. But not every story is a success story although many have been helped to get jobs and get back on their feet. Many are sent by hospitals and doctors."

Most alcoholics are in the business and professional group. "Less than 12 per cent are skid road types," said the member. "The professional man can afford to drink and he feels he has enough inteligence to drink without it becoming a problem. But they become alcoholics.

"We have had them here but they don't keep up their membership," he said. "They get back to their businesses or professions."

Don't they help out financially?

"It's the hardest thing in the world to get a dollar out of a drunk. When they are drinking they are the big time spenders but when they sober up they are more conscious of their obligations. For so long their families have taken second place."

"We have to look to United for our help," he said.

Th' rocket thet looks an' sails away may live t' look another day.

Trust Firms Announce Merger

TORONTO (CP) — Shareholders of Eastern and Chartered Trust Co. and Canada Permanent Trust Co. have approved a merger of the two firms. Eastern and Chartered's name will disappear under the merger, which will give the Canada Permanent Trust Co. assets of about $2,000,000,000, making it Canada's largest trust company in terms of capital.

Officials said it is expected to process about $1,000,000,000 worth of mortgages yearly.

Federal Treasury Board approval is needed for the merger to take effect, but no difficulty in obtaining is expected.

Canada Permanent Trust is owned by Canada Permanent Mortgage Corp., which will buy the shares of the new company on the basis of three Mortgage Corp. shares for one Trust company share.

Today we have a little of this and a pinch of that, commencing with a letter from Doug Blagrave, of 1547 Mount Douglas Crossroad, on the subject of air raid sirens.

"I'm a long-time Air Force man," says he, "and I've heard all the pathetic arguments used to justify the installation of sirens. They are based on reasons that applied 25 years ago and should not persuade a 12-year-old boy."

Mr. Blagrave goes on to protest against "meaningless wails that would do nobody good if it were for real." He feels the municipalities should outlaw the sirens and require that they be dismantled.

Since the yowlers are national defence department installations, I doubt the municipalites could shuck them even if they were so inclined. As for their usefulness in time of trouble, I can only air my personal vision of how the drill would go.

First: the big boom. Then, far off on the perimeters, a belated siren wailing with none to hear.

★

On a recent evening six nations chattered their way toward the Gordon Head home of their eighth member, a new addition to the bridge group. The seventh, I should explain, was to follow a few minutes later, if she could make it. If not, she'd send a friend who, she insisted, they would just adore.

Their directions were explicit:

"You know the so-and-sos? Well, my place is almost directly across the street. There's a big tree at the front, and the porch light will be on. You can't miss it!"

Arrived, the ladies rang and waited. A little boy in pyjamas ushered them into the front room, said "Mummy won't be long," then vanished.

Presently the door chimes tinkled, the small boy answered and another woman entered. She seemed very nice, though shy, and they set out to make her feel at home by engaging her in a brisk patter of conversation about the weather and the high price of everything.

This went on for several minutes. Then the supposed substitute for their seventh swallowed twice and said, "I'm afraid I don't quite understand. Are you sure you're in the right house?"

They weren't, and in a confusion of apologies, they trooped off to a place two doors removed which also boasted a large tree in its front lawn.

Their hostess—right one this time—met them on her lighted porch. Number seven had phoned to say that neither she nor her friend could come, so would it be all right if she invited a neighbor to make up their quorum?

You guessed it: same lady, and a good hand she played, too!

In these days of precise schedules and everyone in a hurry, it's nice to hear about someone willing to make time for an act of kindness. I don't know the names of the trainmen involved, but according to friend Lew Lunde of 2559 Bermuda Place, they rescued a young member of Victoria's Thunderbirds from a predicament that would have put a proper kink in her trip to Expo.

Mr. Lunde and his family were also Expo bound that mid-August day when the train with the girls' drill team among its passengers made a five-minute stop for viewing and picture-taking at Mt. Robson lookout.

The train had resumed its up-grade haul when one of the Thunderbirds discovered that she had left her handbag behind at the lookout, and in it her spending money for the trip

"The engineer must have backed that train pretty close to half a mile so she could recover her bag," Lew recalls.

Home now, with thoughts of cloudy Venus where a Soviet surprise package lies. Lord help us, the moon's become but a way-station!

Genetics Law Smiles Kindly on Bi-Racial Children

By KATHRINE THOMAS

The wider apart parents are racially the stronger their children will be.

This statement, made by geneticists Dr. and Mrs. E. Derek Styles, came as a surprise to many of the prospective adopting parents attending the first public meeting on adoption held this week by the Greater Victoria Family and Children's Service.

"The wider the cross, the less chance there is of an abnormality as a result of inbreeding," Dr. Styles said.

"Children of inter-racial marriages are the results of populations that have been breeding separately for a long time.

"When you have inbreeding, there is a much likelier risk of bad genes, bad characteristics, expressing themselves."

At the moment there are nearly 20 infants available for adoption and almost the equal number of approved adoption homes. But most applicants want white Caucasian children and half of the infants are inter-racial—part Indian and part Oriental.

Dr. and Mrs. Styles, together with adopting parents Dylis and Hunter Poole and social worker Oliver Hatter, formed a resource panel to answer any questions on adoption.

Among the questions answered by the panel:

● Is religion a barrier to adoption?

The agency is non-denominational. It tries to place Roman Catholic children in Catholic homes unless the mother signs a religious waiver. The agency will not place a child with Jehovah Witnesses unless specifically requested by the mother, because of the Witnesses' refusal to allow blood transfusions. However if the mother has no religion or does not care that her child be brought up in a specifically Protestant home, they may consider placing the child in a non-religious home. The welfare of the child comes first.

● How long does one have to wait for a child after application has been made?

It takes two or three months for a social worker to make a home study. Then the waiting period is up to three months. But if the adopting parents are very particular, if they specify sex, race, educational background, it may take longer.

● What is the usual age of children for adoption?

Ten days after birth. There are few children adoptable after age two. The agency tries to find older children permanent foster homes. They need roots and if they are well-adjusted in their homes and their foster parents can raise them to maturity. They will not be moved — even for adoption.

● What is the age limit for adopting parents?

45 years if a medical report (which is done on all adopting parents) says they are in good health and capable of raising the child to maturity.

● Ore brothers and sisters placed in the same home?

Yes, the agency does its best to try to place them together so families will not be broken up.

● What are the marriage requirements for adopting parents?

They must be married two years.

● Is it necessary to have your own children before you can adopt?

No. But if there are natural children, the agency prefers the adopting child to be the youngest, the baby of the family.

● Can a natural mother who has signed adoption consent try to reclaim the child in the six months before adoption is completed?

It is very unlikely. She would have to show that her consent had been obtained through duress or without full understanding. There have been two cases out of 10,000 in the last five years that have reached the Supreme Court and the judge has decided in favor of the adopting parents.

● What are the main reasons for refusing application?

Marriage problems and bad health.

The next public meeting on adoption will be held Monday, Nov. 20 at 8 p.m. at Spencer-house, 1951 Cook Street.

Cabinet Trips 'Not Junkets' Says Bennett

With two cabinet ministers out of the country on extended tours and Premier Benent just back from his third trip abroad within the past 12 months, the British Columbia government is displaying unusual sensitivity to criticism of "cabinet junketing".

Latest manifestation that it's a sore spot came from Premier Bennett Wednesday when he called a press conference and immediately brandished a letter to reporters as they filed into his office.

He said the letter came from the head of a giant international firm, Union Miniere, who said he was happy to have met Mr. Bennett in Belgium last month and was sending a team of experts to B.C. to survey investment opportunities.

"That's what happens on these so-called junkets," Mr. Bennett snapped at the reporters.

"But I don't mind all this criticism. We who have been long in public life don't mind these things," he said in a softer tone.

PERMISSION

Earlier, Trade and Industry Minister Ralph Loffmark called a special press conference to answer the criticism and said sarcastically he would await press permission to spend $700 on an 11-day trip to Europe and Montreal on five missions.

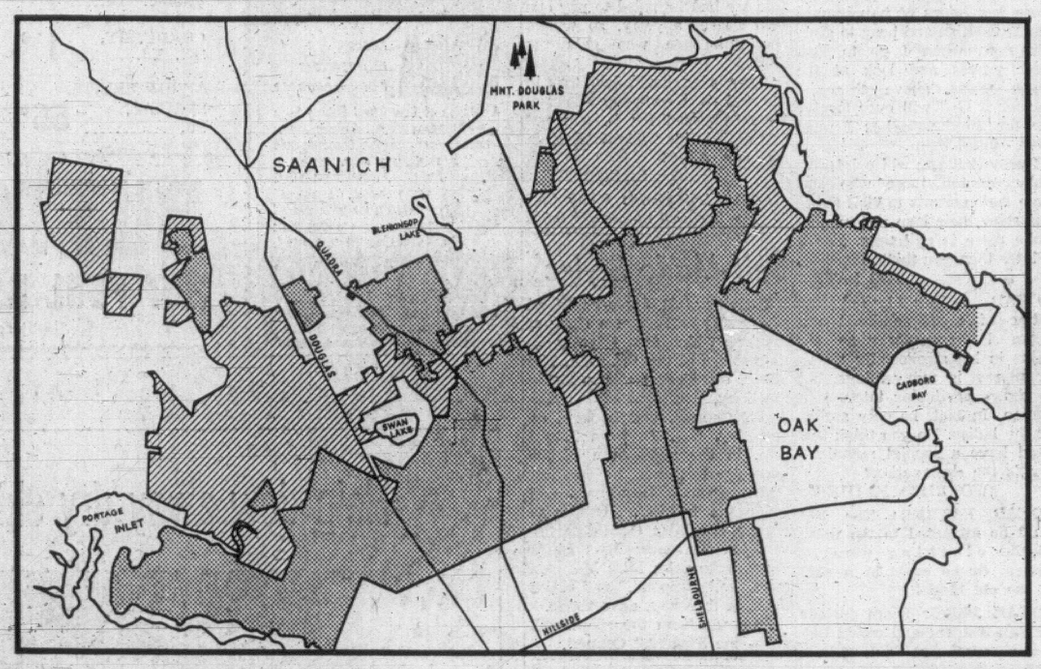
The trip is being planned because:

A Vancouver consulting engineering firm wants his help in negotiating a lumber contract in Yugoslavia; a major German institution investor needs a bit more persuading to take a plunge into B.C.; a French group is interested in copper exploration and possibilities of establishing a B.C. copper smelter; another French group is interested in a joint venture in the pulp and paper field; and he has an opportunity to buy some equipment and film at Expo for use in the B.C. pavilion at Expo 70 in Osaka.

TOO MUCH

"Am I to tell (businessmen) that I can't go because the paper says I am spending too much money?" he demanded.

Mr. Loffmark said B.C. newspapers make no fuss about extensive trips by federal cabinet ministers but attack Highways Minister P. A. Gaglardi's Lear jet and his (Loffmark's) travel expenses which are estimated at $7,000 this year.



SPRING vote is likely for Saanich ratepyaers on sewer utility proposal. Scheme would merge separately-financed sewered areas (dotted) with 3,460 acres of unswered land (lined) to create one sewer enterprise. Extending sewers on this scale has been estimated as a $6 million project. Septic tank land may be sewered within five years of passage of the necessary bylaw and financed over 30-year period. Half the cost would be for rebuilding 50-year-old outfall at Macaulay Point and running it to deep water, Hampton-Maculay trunk line and sub-trunk lines.

Hansard Studies Begin

By JOHN MIKA
Times Legislative Reporter

The British Columbia government has two studies under way on the question of introducing a Hansard into the legislature, it was revealed today.

The disclosure was made to 28 directors of the British Columbia Chamber of Commerce who met the cabinet this morning for their annual presentation of a brief.

For the first time, the chamber's brief included a strong recommendation that the government set up a verbatim reporting system for legislative debates for the benefit of MLAs and the people who elect them.

FIVE PROPOSALS

The proposal was one of five that were stressed by the directors in their brief of some 50 recommendations and it appeared to impress the cabinet, chamber president J. Bruce Smith of Kelowna told reporters after the meeting.

Mr. Smith said the cabinet gave the impression the Hansard request—which became a hot political issue before and during the last session—is still "a live issue."

Businessmen were told that a study of the question is being conducted by committees in both the cabinet and the Social Credit caucus and Mines Minister Donald Brothers recently prepared a report on the subject after surveying other provinces.

VARIOUS OPINIONS

"But even in the cabinet itself I imagine there are various opinions," Mr. Smith said.

He said some of the ministers suggested they felt that verbatim records were to blame for "rather poor attendance" in the House of Commons and the U.S. Senate.

It was also suggested that spontaneity and quality of debate suffered because legislators were constantly aware of how the record would look.

Mr. Smith said he "hoped" the chamber had gained ground on the Hansard issue but he was more confident about some of the other proposals put to the cabinet.

FISH MINISTER

He said the ministers promised "serious consideration" of the chamber's urging that B.C. revive a department of fisheries with its own minister—a post that was abolished in 1958 in a cabinet shuffle.

He said the cabinet asked the chamber's directors to make a further submission on this proposal—another recommendation that was prevalent among briefs sent to the cabinet by various provincial groups before the last session.

The cabinet also "formally told us they wholeheartedly back us" in the chamber's rejection of the Carter royal commission's recommendations for revamping the taxation principles applying to the mining industry now which permit depletion allowances and other write-offs to encourage exploration.

Mr. Smith said the chamber's request for withdrawal of new legislation last session placing succession duties on share stocks in companies controlled by non-residents of the province also impressed the cabinet.

Resources Minister Ray Williston "confirmed that he had evidence of problems arising from this particular amendment to the Succession Duty Act," Mr. Smith said.

The chamber was asked to make a further submission of specific cases in support of its contention the legislation would tend to discourage capital investment from outside.

That Racket Just Mortars

Mortars firing on the Albert Head range this morning sent a number of Esquimalt and area residents to their phones to find out what the racket was all about.

Wind and low-lying cloud banks bounced the sound back down to the Esquimalt area loud and clear.

Work Point Barracks authorities voiced regret at the disturbance but said the practice was an important part of a soldier's training.

The unit firing the 81-millimetre mortars was from the Queens Own Rifles. There is no other suitable range nearby, said a military spokesman.

Topic for Panel

A six-man panel from the Cowichan Indian Band will discuss the main challenges facing native Indians Sunday evening.

The meeting, which will be open to the general public, will be held at the Thomas More Centre, 4053 Gordon Head Road, at 7:30 p.m.

Following the panel discussion, led by the six Indian leaders, questions will be invited from the floor.

REFERENDUM RULED OUT

Youth Council Spanked For 'Juvenile' Approach

Mayor Hugh Stephen today accused the Victoria Youth Council of "gross discourtesy" in releasing a brief containing VYC demands before bringing it to council.

He told VYC representative Paul Williams on that the youth group's action was "juvenile" and said he was disappointed by their approach.

The VYC earlier this week released a statement asking for a referendum on whether they should have representation on city council and the school board, and asking for a city youth centre. They wanted the referendum held at the Dec. 9 election.

DEMONSTRATIONS

If it appears that no action would be taken by city council, the brief said, the VYC would stage demonstrations and set up an alternative council using city hall facilities.

Mr. Williamson was appearing before city finance committee for VYC member Charles Barber, whose car broke down on route from a youth conference in Nanaimo.

Mayor Stephen told Mr. Williamson he was not speaking against him personally, but against the VYC as a whole.

He said the youth group's approach "alienates the last vestige of sympathy you would have had" from council.

The city would have welcomed them if they had come "as sensible people" and said they would form a group with representation to work with council the mayor said.

But the group doesn't seem to want to operate through "existing channels," he said.

Mr. Williamson replied that the group saw nothing wrong in presenting their position before going to council. Councils tend to be secret and "we want to be open," he said.

NO REFERENDUM

The city has no power to hold a referendum such as the VYC suggested, the mayor said, because it operates under the provincial municipal act.

He reprimanded the VYC for "not doing its homework" and failing to recognize the fact that the city does not have the power to grant the group's demands.

STRIKE TALKS TO RE-OPEN ON MONDAY

Negotiations between McCarter Shingle and Shake Ltd. and striking shingle weavers will be reopened Monday.

Talks will resume at 10:30 a.m. at Red Lion Inn, a company representative said today.

Management will be represented by company president William K. McCarter and Forest Industrial Relations representatives.

Bruce Robertson, business agent for local 2802, Shingle Weavers' Union and his committee are expected to attend.

The union walked off the job Monday stating that their negotiations for wage parity with other parts of the industry, were showing insufficient progress.

Redlin Guilty In Sooke Slaying

James Frederick Redlin, 37-year-old millwright, today was found guilty of non-capital murder in the fatal shooting of Mrs. Lavina Nicholson near Sooke last May 9.

A 12-man jury returned its verdict at 1 p.m. after deliberating for nearly two hours.

He was sentenced to life.

"I have no alternative but to pass this sentence," said Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz.

Nicholas Mussalem, defending Redlin, said in his statement to the jury Wednesday afternoon that the rifle shot which killed Mrs. Nicholson was fired accidently.

Mr. Mussalem said the height of a bullet hole in the wall and wounds suffered by Mrs. Nicholson indicated that the rifle held by Redlin was discharged accidentally at an upward angle.

Crown prosecutor Kenneth Murphy told the 12-man jury that the evidence all pointed to the guilt of the accused. He recalled the testimony of Harold Nicholson, husband of the dead woman, who said Redlin entered their bedroom with a rifle at about 4 a.m. on May 9.

Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz gave his charge to the jury this morning, after which the jurymen retired to consider their verdict.

THREW SHOE AT POLICEMAN

Five witnesses testified in magistrate's court today to the good character of a man charged with intoxication and assaulting a police officer.

Donald Kennedy, 37, of 930 Snowdrop, pleaded guilty to both charges.

Court was told that after he had been arrested for intoxication Oct. 15, Kennedy threw his shoe at Saanich police Constable William Nixon.

Fining the accused $350, Magistrate Ostler commented "people assaulting a police officer can usually expect a jail term.

"A fine is most unusual and should by no means be considered the general rule."

NOT LAYMAN OR STATE SAYS DR. PETER BANKS

Doctor Must Decide Who Shall Live, Die

The choice of whose life will be saved by dramatic new medical innovations must always rest with the doctor, a Victoria physician maintains.

Dr. Peter Banks made the observation in a speech to the Canadian Medical Association in Banff last April. His speech is reported in a recent issue of the British Columbia Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Banks referred as an example to the new artificial kidney machines which are able to greatly prolong life, but which are still in short supply because of costs.

★ ★ ★

(Nine patients are being treated by artificial kidney units at Royal Jubilee Hospital here. So far there are sufficient facilities to suit the demand.)

But in some U.S. cities particularly, there have been greater demands for the treatment than hospitals can meet. Committees have been set up to determine who shall live and who shall not.

Dr. Banks stated:

"When one looks into the future I would suggest to you that no society will be able to afford for all of its citizens, all the new arteries and the new kidneys and the new hearts and the expensive biological chemical readjustments that science will make possible.

"Therefore we shall be faced with the tremendous problem of patient selection.

"On what basis are we to select who has what?

"Is it better for society that a middle-aged and successful man should go on the artificial kidney or should it be used for the young unproven student?

"I think regardless of whether we think it is right or wrong, doctors will be forced to go on making these decisions, because I don't think anyone else can. And I don't think it's going to increase their popularity one bit."

He said the alternative is that these decisions be made by groups of citizens whose regard for others guides their actions

★ ★ ★

"But in practice these groups often turn out to be less altruistic (having less regard for others) than the doctors, and usually finish by asking for medical advice awyway.

"The other alternative is that the government will make these decisions, and as a student of George Orwell (a writer who envisaged a society planned for heartless efficiency), I don't like that one bit."

This is surely a very important reason for trying to keep our doctors always independent as much as we can, of the possibility of government direction and control."

The doctor's statements followed a description of the vast expansion of medical knowledge and vast expansion of demand for medical services.

"It takes no scientific soothsayer to predict that the knowledge explosion must inevitably lead to a cost explosion and that the investigative facilities of every hospital in the next two decades will have to double and double again.

"The question will arise, can we as a society afford this. But this is no answer. Already there are those who say that everybody should have a complete checkup every year.

"If this was done, it would use the full time of all the doctors in the country doing that and nothing else," he stated.

Dr. Banks said that all over the world there is a shortage of doctors. In Canada they are relatively abundant. We have one for every 825 people. But we need 1,300 new doctors every year to keep this supply constant.

★ ★ ★

Despite this known need, our universities are supplying only 850 a year and some of these leave Canada for the U.S. Canada has filled the gap by importing doctors, but their countries of origin are moving to stop the departures.

This is why medical universities in Canada are lobbying for new medical schools, he said.

Mariner Swoops Past

Venus Data Gathered By U.S. Spacecraft

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) Mariner V skimmed within 2,480 miles of Venus at 10:34 a.m. PDT today on an atmosphere sampling mission similar to that of a Russian craft which parachuted a capsule to the planet's surface Wednesday.

Flight controllers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratories here said signals indicated all instruments on the U.S. craft were working and data was being recorded on tape for playback several hours later.

One of the key experiments—measuring atmospheric depth and density by distortion of radio waves—took place as the 540-pound craft swept behind Venus at a speed of 19,000 an hour shortly after its closest approach.

The tinkling tones of its radio carrier wave, which carries coded data signals, were interrupted as the craft was hidden from earth by the planet.

EXTREMELY HOT

Bending of the waves by Venus' cloudy atmosphere—which the Soviet Venus IV confirmed as mostly carbon dioxide and extremely hot—was expected to show the density of the atmosphere and how far it extends from the surface.

The signals stopped at 10:37 a.m. and resumed 23 minutes later.

During the flyby, instruments on Mariner V measured the amount of hydrogen and oxygen in the upper fringes of Venus' atmosphere. From this, U.S. scientists hoped to deduce the density of the heavier lower layer of carbon dioxide and thus check the accuracy of the Soviet craft's findings.

Strength of emissions from sunlight-excited atoms of hydrogen and oxygen was a measure of heat in the upper atmosphere. Scientists said they could calculate from this the heat on the surface, which Venus IV radioed was 536 degrees Fahrenheit.

Only hint of trouble came a few hours before the flyby when ground transmitters ran into a 30-minute delay in sending a backup signal to start the tape recorder. The recorder turned on automatically, however, and the mission went off as planned.

Estimates of the time it would take Mariner V to have its signals blacked out by Venus had ranged from 11 minutes to 26 minutes, depending upon the actual diameter of the planet.

NEW ABOLITION BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

OTTAWA (CP)—The Commons today gave first reading to a government bill which would limit the death penalty to persons who are convicted of murdering police officers or prison guards.

Solicitor-General Pennell said the bill for a five-year test period would limit capital punishment to slayers of prison guards and police.

Court Quashes Charges

By PAUL WILLIAMSON

Accused bank robber Carl Raymond had a few brief moments of freedom today after Magistrate William Ostler, on technicalities, threw out charges of armed robbery against Raymond and his wife.

Confusion reigned in the courtroom for a few moments, and a crowd converged in the adjacent hallway, everyone making suggestions of what to do next.

Raymond, 22, originally charged with the armed robbery of the Bank of Montreal at Fort and Richmond last Friday, was arrested again shortly after leaving the courtroom.

He has been re-charged and was to appear in court this afternoon.

WIFE FREE

At press time, the prosecutor's office had not yet decided whether to re-arrest Raymond's wife, 16-year-old Janet.

When Raymond appeared in court earlier, his wife was sitting in the front row with a policewoman, presumably waiting to be called herself.

Magistrate Ostler informed Raymond's counsel George Jones, appointed this morning by the legal aid society, he wished to read a statement with regard to the charge.

The charges against both the accused were contained on the same information which had been sworn before the court. Mrs. Raymond's case had been elevated from juvenile court Wednesday.

THREE REASONS

Magistrate Ostler "quashed the information" for three reasons.

He said the new charge against Mrs. Raymond was not the same as the original one laid in juvenile court.

He also said he would not accept an "information", (the legal document on which the charge is written) on which two people were charged with two different things.

His third reason was that it was not clear whether Mrs. Raymond was being charged as a principal in the crime, or as aiding and abetting.

When the magistrate pronounced the charges quashed, confusion took over.

Raymond, in the prisoner's box, appeared bewildered. When the court officer attempted to lead him back to the jail,

PEARKES
. . . in demand

OTTAWA—Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes is expected to remain in his post for another six months.

Mr. Pearkes, who was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia in 1960, is nearing the end of a second one-year extension of the regular five-year term.

It is understood he has been asked to remain for another six months and is expected to accept.

Mr. Pearkes' current term runs out at the end of the month.

A spokesman at Government House today said Mr. Pearkes would not make any comment on the report because any announcement must come from Ottawa "but they're still hoping to move at the end of the month."

WON'T 'INTERFERE'

Sask. Takes Over College Finances

REGINA (CP)—Premier Thatcher said Wednesday night the provincial government will assume direct financial control of the University of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Thatcher, in an address to the Potashville Education Association, said that while the government will financially control the university, "it will not interfere with internal operations."

The premier also announced Welfare Minister McIsaac has been handed the provincial education portfolio and the job of spearheading a new approach to educational finance which will involve more government control in all education spending.

He said changes would be made in the education act to help control costs at the local levels.

"We do not intend in any way to impinge on local autonomy," he explained. "But I must say we shall try to find far more practical financial controls over the power of school boards to spend provincial money."

On university spending, Mr. Thatcher said:

"In essence, the university will be obliged to make its financial requests to the legislature in the same manner as any other department. For example, they will have to request so much for salaries, so much for travelling and so much for new buildings."

He said the university today is fast becoming one of the government's largest spending departments.

This year, the government must find $28,000,00 for University of Saskatchewan and the campus population is growing at a rate of more than 1,200 students a year.

Authorities Fight Rash Of Anti-War Incidents

From Times News Services

A group of anti-war demonstrators tried to storm an induction centre in Chicago today in another of a series of incidents designed to build up sentiment against U.S. Vietnam involvement.

Chicago police repelled the would-be intruders at the induction centre door and arrested 11 males and seven females.

About 70 persons had been parading in front of the induction centre, just west of Chicago's Loop, when some of them broke ranks and tried to enter the building.

In Wisconsin and California University authorities have moved against student leaders of anti-war and anti-draft protests after demonstrators in Madison and Oakland clashed with police.

In Washington sources said the U.S Army may use paratroops to augment the Pentagon's civilian guard force in preventing disruption or worse in a planned massive anti-war demonstration Saturday.

University of Wisconsin officials moved to oust leaders of a campus anti-war sit-in Wednesday which was broken up by riot-trained Madison city police. At least 65 persons were injured in the melee.

Demonstrators discussed classroom strikes as a possible retaliatory measure. They were supported by several hundred sympathetic faculty members.

The demonstrators were protesting the presence of representatives of the Dow Chemical Co., manufacturer of napalm for the war in Vietnam, on campus to interview job applicants.

VIOLATE RULES

On the west coast, Arleigh Williams, dean of students at the University of California's Berkeley campus, said his office will charge at least 20 students with violating university rules in the on-campus anti-war rallies.

Anti-draft demonstrators continued their protest at the besieged Oakland army induction centre and the arrest of 91 squatters at the door brought to more than 300 the numbers of persons seized since the protest began.

Governor Ronald Reagan, at the national governors conference on a cruise to the Virgin Islands, warned that if demonstrators step up their protest, California could use the national guard.

PORTLAND POLICE CUT ANTI-DRAFT 'CHAIN-IN'

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Six draft protesters chained themselves to the entrance of the Selective Service Office in Portland today.

They blocked the entrance for 45 minutes until police used metal cutters to snap the thick chains.

The protestors were dragged by their feet to a waiting police wagon chanting "Hell no, we won't go".

They were dragged about 30 feet with their heads against the ground.

They were charged with disorderly conduct.

They were all Reed College students, police said.

EARTH-LIKE ROCK INDICATED ON VENUS

By ROBERT EVANS

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Russia's Venus IV space capsule sent back messages indicating that the surface of Venus consists of solid rocks like those on earth, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today.

Dr Vladimir Siforov, a prominent Soviet specialist on long-distance communications, told Tass that radioed reports as Venus reached the planet Wednesday indicated the surface rocks have physical properties like the silicates of the earth.

Before the landing there had been many theories about the surface hidden behind the shroud of clouds that veil Venus.

Experts' ideas about the surface ranged from a scorching inferno of dusty desert without a scrap of moisture to a waste covered with ice and water.

Tass quoted Siforov as saying the report on a rocky surface needed checking by an automatic station which would transmit information from the surface of the planet.

The Russians have not indicated the life expectancy of the instruments aboard the automatic station, but they did say the station was not equipped for picture transmission.

Members of the Soviet design team hoped the epoch-making Venus IV would discover life on the mystery planet, it was reported today.

But information relayed back during the instrument capsule's 90-minute float-down through the thick clouds around the planet indicated life is unlikely to exist there.

As it descended by parachute, the package reported there was no free oxygen in any significant quantity in the Venusian atmosphere and that the surface temperature was 530 Fahrenheit.

It also revealed that the main component of the planet's atmosphere was carbon dioxide and that pressure on the surface was up to 15 times that of the earth's atmosphere, all of which virtually precludes any form of life as it is known on earth.

HOW WE IGNORE OUR OLD FOLKS

By PETE LOUDON

British Columbia has a plan for extension of $1 per day care for the incapacitated elderly who need bed care—but it's a long way from reality. This final chapter in a series tells how a neighbor province met a similar emergency without waiting for the community conscience to meet the need.

If you're broke and old in British Columbia, the best thing you can do for yourself is move to Alberta.

If you become so infirm in B.C. that you must enter a private hospital, the welfare department will pay $230 on your behalf, (including your pension cheque).

This is so far below the $270 that private hospitals say is required, you will have a hard time finding a bed.

In Alberta the private hospital would be paid $375 on your behalf.

You would pay $2.50 a day out of your old age pension and have money left over. The Alberta government would pay a $10 per day subsidy to make up the balance of your bill.

In B.C., your pension cheque would be forfeited and it would meet the first $105 of the $230 payment. Ten per cent of the balance would be recovered by the province from the municipality you live in. Fifty per cent would be indirectly paid by the federal government.

In B.C., the province actually pays only $50 of your bill—about 21 per cent. The federal government pays 75 per cent.

This is great for conserving provincial revenues to meet things like debt charges of hydro developments. But it works out tough for the patient.

SO ALANO LOOKS TO UNITED APPEAL

Spending Spree Over When Sober

By TED GASKELL

"We'd be broke by spring if it weren't for United Appeal," a member of the Alano Club said today, "and scores of reformed alcoholics would have lost their haven from the temptation of liquor."

With the $4,000 from the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal not only can the club stay open but it can brighten its fading interior and make it attractive to the men and women who use its facilities, not only as a temperance social club but to meet and discuss problems with their fellows.

The Alano Club has been operating, and paying its own way, for about 18 years, in its second floor quarters at Broad and Johnson.

Now it has fallen on hard times.

It takes about $400 a month for rent and other overhead. Less than 100 members pay their $2 a month dues and the club's savings, amassed during years of successful bingos and other functions, are dwindling.

During a tour of the club with its billiard room, games room, meeting room, lounge and coffee shop, the member said "the club is important to the reformed alcoholic. Once he has given up liquor he must have somewhere to go. It's no use him going to the cocktail bars and clubs with friends for his social life. He can't sit and drink ginger ale while his friends take liquor."

At least not at first. He might later when he becomes self-sufficient and doeesn't need the Alano Club any more.

But the Alano Club is a "halfway point". Here the reformed alcoholic can meet others with the same problem. He can talk out his fears and worries, have a snack or a sandwich, a cup of coffee or a milk shake without being exposed to liquor in any way.

No one who has been drinking is allowed in the club. "We'll accept people with hangovers if they are members, but this isn't a sobering-up service," said the member.

Before anyone can join he or she—there are as many women as men among the members—must be a member of Alcoholics Anonymous and must have been sober for a month.

Although this is a stipulation, the club is not connected in any way with AA, although it does rent out its small meeting room to the local groups for their meetings.

The member told this story:

"I came here in 1951. I had money but no job, no self confidence or self respect and I was not welcome at home. But I have stayed sober, returned to my work and family and recently I retired."

"Thousands of people have been helped here. We get about 50 members a day dropping in to talk or for coffee. But not every story is a success story although many have been helped to get jobs and get back on their feet. Many are sent by hospitals and doctors."

Most alcoholics are in the business and professional group. "Less than 12 per cent are skid road types" said the member. "The professional man can afford to drink and he feels he has enough intelligence to drink without it becoming a problem. But they become alcoholics.

"We have had them here but they don't keep up their membership," he said. "They get back to their businesses or professions."

Don't they help out financially?

"It's the hardest thing in the world to get a dollar out of a drunk. When they are drinking they are the big time spenders but when they sober up they are more conscious of their obligations. For so long their families have taken second place."

"We have to look to United for our help," he said.

Lone Seaman Survives Sinking

ESBJERG, Denmark (Reuters) — A Greek seaman picked up from a lifeboat in the gale-swept North Sea told his rescuers Wednesday he believes he is the only survivor from a 3,846-ton freighter that sank Tuesday night.

Rescue vessels today picked up the bodies of 15 crew members of the freighter.

It was the most serious damage at sea so far as hurricane - strength storms ripped across northern Europe, taking a heavy toll in life and property.

The seaman, Emanuel Abdelas, said his ship, the Nagusena, carrying a Greek crew of 20 to 25 men, went down off the Danish coast while carrying a cargo of coal.

The ship was Panamanian-owned and flew the Lebanese flag.

SPOT OIL SLICK

A Danish air force helicopter spotted an air bubble, a big oil slick, and floating wreckage near the spot where the seaman was picked up by a Danish fishing boat about four miles west of Esbjerg.

Across the rest of Northern Europe, at least 11 persons were known dead in the storms.

Top-Secret U.K. Intelligence Chiefs 'Named'

NEW YORK (AP)—The Saturday Evening Post in an article in its Nov. 4 issue publicly reveals for the first time the names of the heads of the two most secret British intelligence agencies.

The article says that DI-6, England's espionage arm, is run by Sir Dick Goldsmith White and that DI-5, the counterintelligence division, is headed by Sir Edward M. Furnival-Jones.

In London, the Daily Express published the names of the two intelligence chiefs despite a voluntary arrangement between publications and the British government to protect national security.

A spokesman for the newspaper, a Lord Beaverbrook daily with a circulation of 4,000,000, said the names were printed because the Post planned to use them in the forthcoming issue.

The Post article is excerpted from the book The Espionage Establishment, by David Wise and Thomas B. Ross. The book will be published by Random House.

The story says that when he was knighted in June, 1967, Jones appeared cryptically on the honors list as "Jones, Edward Martin Furnival, attached ministry of defence."

White was deputy chief of the counterintelligence subdivision of G-2 on the staff of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's Supreme Allied headquarters in the Second World War, the article says.

Elsewhere in the article, the authors say that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency spends $1,500,000,000 a year, "flouts" Congress with a domestic division a block from the White House, and that an agent said it once had a plan to blow off Cuban Premier Fidel Castro's head with an exploding cigar.

They contend the CIA "flouted the intent of Congress" because the lawmakers were assured the agency would not engage in activities in the U.S.

The article says during Castro's visit to the United Nations in New York in 1966 a CIA agent approached Police Chief Inspector Michael J. Murphy with a plan to get Castro to smoke an exploding cigar.

If the CIA was pulling Murphy's leg, the authors commented, "it was a shockingly foolish subject to joke about."

Businessmen Jailed

BERLIN (Reuters)—The East German Supreme Court today sentenced one West German businessman to life imprisonment and another for 15 years for spying. Sentenced to life was 49-year-old Hamburg businessman Herbert Latinsky. The prosecution said he used his position to sabotage East German trade and industry.

Competition For Labor Posts Likely

Election contests for some key positions in the B.C. Federation of Labour are expected at next week's convention in Vancouver.

"It is safe to hazard a guess there will be opposition to the secretary-treasurer and three council officers' positions," said George Kowbel, recording secretary of the Vancouver local, International Woodworkers of America.

He said, "if there is a necessity for someone to oppose the present secretary-treasurer and no one else is available, I would become available if drafted."

Other persons were prepared to stand for the position, he said, but he declined to identify them at this time.

Federation secretary-treasurer Ray Haynes was appointed last year after Pat O'Neal resigned. He defeated Charles Stewart at last fall's convention election by a margin of 65 votes.

Opposition to the present federation leadership will be discussed at a meeting before the convention at which time it is expected that an alternative slate will be prepared.

The federation's handling, or what its critics call mishandling, of the pulp union "bugging" affair and the suspension and reinstatement of four IWA locals are expected to be two issues in the election contests.

'Right or Wrong, Obey Injunction'

Validity of Court Order 'Irrelevant' In Union Contempt Case Appeal

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Labour Reporter

A court injunction must be obeyed whether it is right or wrong, the British Columbia Appeal Court was told Wednesday.

"An order of the Supreme Court, however wrong or irregular, still binds and has full force until reversed on appeal," said crown lawyer David Sigler.

"An injunction, however wrong, must be obeyed."

He made the point as the appeal resumed of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and three of its top officials.

The hearing, which continued in Victoria Law Courts building at 11 a.m. today, began last month and lasted four days before adjournment to Wednesday.

The union and president Steve Stavenes, secretary Homer Stevens and business agent Jack Nicol were convicted of criminal contempt of court by Mr. Justice Dohm earlier this year.

The contempt action arose from an injunction issued last March during the Prince Rupert fishing dispute, comments made in two press releases and a union bulletin and a UFAWU membership vote on the injunction.

Fined $25,000 for Contempt

The union was fined $25,000 and the three officials jailed for one year each. The men, all from Vancouver, were later released on bail. The injunction required officials of the union to tell members to fulfil a contract to unload fishing vessels.

Mr. Sigler answering a defence contention that the order was invalid said the conviction did not depend on the validity of the March 23 injunction because the law must be obeyed.

Mr. Sigler also dismissed a contention that contempt proceedings cannot be taken against a union as such.

He said in previous cases a union was found to be subject to being sued for damages, a union was liable to prosecution and a union is a statutory entity separate from its members.

He also quoted the well-known 1901 British case of Taff Vale Railway Company and the Amagamated Society of Railway Servants where it was decided that a union could be sued for damages caused by its agents' actions during a strike.

(This decision, however, was reversed by the Trade Disputes Act of 1906, according to Encyclopedia Britannica.)

Court Can Decide on Procedure

Mr. Sigler said the court can decide on procedure and there is "no obligation on the court to proceed otherwise that it sees fit."

On a contention that the UFAWU and its three officials were not told at the outset whether it was criminal or civil contempt and this deprived them of rights under the Criminal Code and Bill of Rights, he said a judge can only rule on this after hearing the evidence.

"There is authority in the Poje case that the court may take proceedings . . . whether it be contempt of criminal or civil nature," he said.

"When the matter comes to be heard the judge is not in a position to rule until all the evidence is in.

"I submit Mr. Justice Dohm was justified, when called on to state whether it was criminal or civil, when he said he wouldn't rule at that time. But at judgment he ruled it was contempt criminal in nature."

On a contention that the equality before the law under the Bill of Rights, he said this federal law is "not applicable to alter established procedure of the Supreme Court."

Union Took Vote Instead

The Supreme Court was justified in "bringing the appellants up short" by summary proceedings. Where litigation was pending and where there was contempt "of this nature" the court was not only right in exercising its jurisdiction but "it should do so."

Instead of obeying the injunction, a union membership vote was initiated and comments made in press releases which "obstructed the order of the court. There was an obstruction —a challenge to the court and that is what is inherent in their action."

One press release, said Mr. Sigler, said union members prefer not to handle unfair cargoes and union members will not help break strikes.

"Judge or no judge, these are the facts," he quoted the release.

The general executive board of the UFAWU was called into emergency session and decided only the union as a whole could decide if a union officer could send a telegram on behalf of the union.

No one officer could be considered the union. The executive did not recommend which way members should vote in a secret ballot.

The question posed was whether a telegram should be sent to Prince Rupert saying that by order of the Supreme Court permission is granted by the UFAWU to land fish from five boats "and such operations are to be carried out forthwith."

The appeal, being heard by three judges, is on both the contempt conviction and the sentences. Presentations so far have been only on the conviction and submissions on the sentences will follow.

SHINGLE WORKERS SET FOR LONG STRIKE . . . IF

Twenty shingle workers are prepared for "a long strike if necessary" but are ready to meet mill management for an early settlement, union business agent Bruce Robertson said Wednesday night.

He told the Victoria Labour Council that Local 2802 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters was certified earlier this year but agreed to defer negotiations until the McCarter Shingle and Shake mill came into operation.

Talks started in July but they dragged on and the employees decided to legally strike the mill Monday because negotiations showed "insufficient progress".

He noted that the price and demand for shingles and shakes lag at this time of the year.

The Shingle Weavers Union has said it is seeking wages and conditions similar to other mills in this industry.

A company statement said the union is threatening the future of the new mill by "demanding concessions higher than those that exist in the rest of the industry."

A. P. Chadwick on October 24, 1917. Mr. Meiss served as head sidesman of the church for many years and his wife is still active in the Chancel Guild. They have one daughter, Mrs. James (Thelma) Randall and one grandson, Terrance Randall, both of this city. Born in Victoria, Mr. Meiss has lived in British Columbia all his life. He was employed as a wireless-telegrapher in the telecommunications branch of the federal government and was stationd in many communities on the west coast and, in later years, served in Victoria as chief radio inspector for Vancouver Island. He served with the Royal Canadian Navy during the First World War. His wife was born in Beatrice, Nebraska, and came to Canada with her parents in 1912. Both have given a great deal of their leisure time to fraternal organizations.

WHY GROW OLD?

By JOSEPHINE LOWMAN

Here is a letter which will interest many women because either they have a husband who has retired or one who is going to retire.

Lowman

Dear Mrs. Lowman,

I enjoyed your recent article on retirement. Don't let anyone tell you that the first two or three years of married life are the hardest. They say that because their husband has not retired yet.

I did not look forward to my husband's retirement mainly because he has no special interests or hobbies with which to fill his time. He doesn't fish or play golf or bowl and if he picks up a hammer to fix anything, I am ready to leave home.

However, I accepted the fact that I was going to have a man around the house most of the time and made up my mind to make a success of this retirement business. As I look back on the past few years, I think the biggest thing I lost was my independence.

I had always attended to paying the bills and doing the shopping and I did my own laundry. Then I thought, "What is he going to do with his time besides empty the garbage, burn the trash, and wait for the mailman and the paper boy?" So I turned all the paying and buying over to my husband. He even takes the clothes to the launderette for me.

Since he likes to talk and visit with old and new acquaintances, he usually runs into one or two people and spends the hour visiting, which is fine with me. But I am wondering if I am being fair to myself? I'm not out of the house at all lots of days.

I miss my neighbors and friends dropping in for a woman's chit-chat. Who can enjoy that with a man sitting in? I also miss the telephone calls I used to get. My friends do not call as they used to. When they do call I can feel my husband getting tense if the conversation goes on for very long.

I am telling you this because there ought to be some way many wives could get together, air their grievances and learn some new tricks about how to make husband's retirement work for both him and the wife.

Of course, you can do this with one or two friends but many more ideas would be helpful."

This is a wonderful idea! I often use my column for group therapy. Write in and tell us what problems your husband's retirement created and what changes in attitude or plan of life you have found helpful.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Love and Respect Your Parents Now!

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 18 years old, and a freshman at college. When I was packing to come here I came across a newspaper clipping from several years back, which I had cut out of your column one day to remind me of what my parents really meant to me. I have read and reread this article and I hope you will reprint it so other young people will stop and THINK. Thank you.

GRATEFUL

"DEAR ABBY: I am the most heartbroken person in the world. I always found time to go everywhere else but to see my old grey-haired parents. They sat at home loving me just the same.

It is too late now to give them those few hours of happiness I was too selfish and busy to give, and now, when I go to visit their graves and look at the green grass above them, I wonder if God will ever forgive me for the heartaches I must have caused them.

I pray that you will print this, Abby, to tell those who still have their parents to visit them, and show their love and respect while there is still time. For it is later than you think.

TOO LATE

DEAR ABBY: I am the father of a 10-month-old son whom I frequently take for walks in his stroller. He shows an interest in many things, but he shows particular interest in women. In fact, he only smiles for the ladies. Do you think this could have a special meaning? What's the explanation?

WORRIED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: The boy could be attracted to the more colorful clothing worn by women. Or he could be a chip off the old block!

DEAR ABBY: I am furious over an incident and would like to know what you think of it.

My husband and I went out for dinner last week, and quite by accident we met some friends who asked us to join them. (When I say "friends," I use the term loosely.) I'll call the man "John."

When the check came, my husband asked for separate checks, but John insisted that we could settle up later. Then John's wife made a quick remark that we should let John pick up the check so he could put it on his expense account.

John paid for dinner and drinks for the four of us and obtained a receipt for it.

Now, my husband received a call from John asking for our share in CASH! My husband says it's no skin off our noses, that we had intended to pay our own share, anyway, so what's the difference who gets the money?

I say, why should John turn in our bill as a company expense, be reimbursed for it, and put our cash in his pocket? What do you say, Abby?

FURIOUS

Gov'ts Probe Dosco Deal

Ottawa, Nova Scotia Check to See If Subsidy Agreements Breached

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson pledged the federal government's help "in every appropriate way" Wednesday to assist Nova Scotia in finding a solution to the planned closing of steel mill operations in Sydney.

But, Mr. Pearson told the Commons, initial responsibility rests with the province in a case, such as this, in which a particular company in a particular province is involved.

Dominion Steel and Coal Corp., a subsidiary of Hawker Siddeley of the United Kingdom, advised the government last Thursday it plans to terminate its steel mill operations as uneconomic.

Justice Minister Trudeau said in the Commons his department is seeking to determine whether Dosco breached an agreement it made last spring with the Nova Scotia and federal governments. The two governments put $6,000,000 into new bulk-handling facilities at Sydney with the understanding this amount would be matched by Dosco investment in its plant.

AGREEMENT EXPLICIT

Health Minister MacEachen told the Commons Monday the agreement is explicit on the point that that Dosco was to match the $6,000,000 government investment with an equivalent investment in the steel mill.

He said there is a provision in the agreement that if there is any doubt about it being carried out, arbitration will be conducted by the chief justice of Nova Scotia.

(Nova Scotia's Deputy Attorney-General John A. Y. MacDonald said his department is also investigating Dominion Steel and Coal Corp. financial agreements with Ottawa and Nova Scotia to determine whether any contracts have been broken.)

Forestry Minister Sauve, minister responsible for redevelopment of marginal areas, said in a CBC-TV interview later Wednesday that he and the government had been working for a year on plans to revitalize Cape Breton and the eastern mainland of Nova Scotia. But he had no word of Dosco's closing until last Thursday.

Mr. Sauve did not elaborate, but said creation of a deep-sea port on the Strait of Canso is being considered, to spark industrial development.

Some new industries already are growing in the area and others are envisaged, including the production of heavy water for Canadian-built nuclear power generators.

The Dosco question was first priority in Wednesday's question period in the Commons.

Interim Opposition Leader Starr asked whether the federal government would take the lead. Mr. Pearson said Premier Smith's Progressive Conservative government in Nova Scotia "has taken the responsibility and we are co-operating."

"We will co-operate with the province in every appropriate way to assist in finding a solution," the prime minister added.

Mr. Starr asked: "Does not the prime minister think that unemployment in Canada is a national responsibility, particularly as this situation will create a great deal of unemployment in that part of the country?"

RULED OUT OF ORDER

Mr. Pearson did not reply, and Speaker Lucien Pamoureux said the question was out of order.

Replying to Robert Muir (PC—Cape Breton North and Victoria), Mr. Pearson said he had no knowledge of a proposition by a Herbert B. Noble of Toronto to purchase the Sydney steel mill.

Health Minister MacEachen, Nova Scotia's representative in the cabinet, said there were overtures by Japanese interests being considered by the provincial government, but these were entirely tentative and exploratory.

He said he had no other propositions except a telephone call on which he did not elaborate. The caller's idea was "too infirm" to justify any speculation.

HARD WINTER FOR SYDNEY

SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — "It's back to what it's always been — another handout for Dosco."

This was the bitter comment by one Sydney resident on the province's proposal to underwrite the loss incurred by the Dominion Steel and Coal Corp. for four months if it would continue operation of its steel plant here at full force until mid-May 1968.

Dosco plans to close out the plant by next April 30.

One former steelworker said some people have gone "off the deep end" but these were mainly businessmen who were 'panicky' because they had large investments to lose.

Some workers feel a takeover by new owners would bring a solution to the chronic problem of outdated equipment.

"We've got the men here willing to work but the equipment is outdated," one said.

The hope for a takeover by new owners is combined with a feeling that the government can't let a whole city, and with it a whole island, die.

Nearly everyone agrees that the plant will operate at least through the winter. But behind the hopeful talk of new owners or government action is doubt that it can be carried off.

"It's a big problem," said Mrs. Charlie Legge, the wife of a steelworker. "That's what the men are worried sick about."

She and her husband own their home here but are planning to write to Australia to see if there is work in steel mills there. "We'd just have to board the house up and leave it," that's all."

The lack of confidence in the future was also evident in the business community.

Ted Tracy, a barber, said Tuesdays usually are busy, but this Tuesday had been the quietest one he could recall.

"But that's the usual reaction," he said. "It's the same after layoffs at the plant. Unti they see what's going to happen they stop spending on the little things, anything that can be put off. I expect it will be a hard winter here for all of us."

FAILED TO DIVERSIFY

Feeling against Dosco was generally bitter, he said. Tons of structural steel were used for construction in the Maritimes but Dosco had failed to diversify the plant to take advantage of such markets.

A part-time real estate salesman here said concern about the area's future had been growing since the plant began laying men off last spring. No one was buying houses here in the last few months.

The steelworkers and the city face a crisis but they are facing it calmly and sadly.

Evan Lloyd, director of the Cape Breton Tourist Association, said: "The steelworkers are a hardy lot. They have faced a lot of problems and overcame them."

City Sailors To Graduate As Petty Officers

Two Victoria sailors are among the 11 technical apprentices due to graduate as petty officers from the Fleet School at CFB Esquimalt Oct. 27.

The local graduates are leading seamen A. J. Pickard, 1253 Simon Road and R. J. Lavergne, 338 St. James Street.

The ceremonies mark the end of a 39-month course which includes theory and practical work in marine engineering and six-month practical experience at sea on destroyers. The sailors will graduate as marine engine technicians or hull technicians.

A total of 26 started the course in July, 1964. Losses were due to the strenuous academic program, the high degree of skill demanded in the workshops and the high physical and moral standards which had to be met.

U.S. Jet Fighter For Latin-Americans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The state department said Wednesday the United States is ready to authorize sale of supersonic military planes to Latin American countries.

Department officials insisted that this did not represent a change of policy, although at numerous news conferences official opposition had been expressed to acquisition of such planes by Latin American countries from European countries, notably France.

Although state department officials denied it, Latin Americans construed the latest development as a compromise in the policy which was expressed numerous times, in response to questions, about the purchase of French Mirage planes by Peru.

The policy was that Latin American countries should avoid outlays for sophisticated armament, reduce arms expenditures wherever possible, and divert as much of budgetary expense as possible to economic development.

Accused Bank Robber Enjoys Brief Freedom

Charge Dropped, Re-Arrested

By PAUL WILLIAMSON

Accused bank robber Carl Raymond had a few brief moments of freedom today after Magistrate William Ostler, on technicalities, threw out charges of armed robbery against Raymond and his wife.

Confusion reigned in the courtroom for a few moments, and a crowd converged in the adjacent hallway, everyone making suggestions of what to do next.

Raymond, 22, originally charged with the armed robbery of the Bank of Montreal at Fort and Richmond last Friday, was arrested again shortly after leaving the courtroom.

He has been re-charged and was to appear in court this afternoon.

WIFE FREE

At press time, the prosecutor's office had not yet decided whether to re-arrest Raymond's wife, 16-year-old Janet.

When Raymond appeared in court earlier, his wife was sitting in the front row with a policewoman, presumably waiting to be called herself.

Magistrate Ostler informed Raymond's counsel George Jones, appointed this morning by the legal aid society, he wished to read a statement with regard to the charge.

The charges against both the accused were contained on the same information which had been sworn before the court. Mrs. Raymond's case had been elevated from juvenile court Wednesday.

THREE REASONS

Magistrate Ostler "quashed the information" for three reasons.

He said the new charge against Mrs. Raymond was not the same as the original one laid in juvenile court.

He also said he would not accept an "information" (the legal document on which the charge is written) on which two people were charged with two different things.

His third reason was that it was not clear whether Mrs. Raymond was being charged as a principal in the crime, or as aiding and abetting.

When the magistrate pronounced the charges quashed, confusion took over.

Raymond, in the prisoner's box, appeared bewildered. When the court officer attempted to lead him back to the jail,

HONG KONG (AP) — China claimed today its grain and other food production would be "the highest in history."

The Liberation Daily gave no figures but said "a record harvest is a foregone conclusion." It reported all food production, including grains, vegetables and fruit, would be higher than any year since the formation of the Communist regime 18 years ago.

Mariner Swoops Past

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) Mariner V skimmed within 2,480 miles of Venus at 10:34 a.m. PDT today on an atmosphere sampling mission similar to that of a Russian craft which parachuted a capsule to the planet's surface Wednesday.

Flight controllers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratories here said signals indicated all instruments on the U.S. craft were working and data was being recorded on tape for playback several hours later.

One of the key experiments—measuring atmospheric depth and density by distortion of radio waves—took place as the 540-pound craft swept behind Venus at a speed of 19,000 an hour shortly after its closest approach.

The tinkling tones of its radio carrier wave, which carries coded data signals, were interrupted as the craft was hidden from earth by the planet.

EXTREMELY HOT

Bending of the waves by Venus' cloudy atmosphere—which the Soviet Venus IV confirmed as mostly carbon dioxide and extremely hot—was expected to show the density of the atmosphere and how far it extends from the surface.

The signals stopped at 10:37 a.m. and resumed 23 minutes later.

During the flyby, instruments on Mariner V measured the amount of hydrogen and oxygen in the upper fringes of Venus' atmosphere. From this, U.S. scientists hoped to deduce the density of the heavier lower layer of carbon dioxide and thus check the accuracy of the Soviet craft's findings.

Strength of emissions from sunlight-excited atoms of hydrogen and oxygen was a measure of heat in the upper atmosphere. Scientists said they could calculate from this the heat on the surface, which Venus IV radioed was 536 degrees Fahrenheit.

Only hint of trouble came a few hours before the flyby when ground transmitters ran into a 30-minute delay in sending a backup signal to start the tape recorder. The recorder turned on automatically, however, and the mission went off as planned.

Estimates of the time it would take Mariner V to have its signals blacked out by Venus had ranged from 11 minutes to 26 minutes, depending upon the actual diameter of the planet.

The lucky holders will win $1,300 for drawing horses. Prize for a winning horse is $150,000; $60,000 for second and $30,000 for third.

Authorities Fight Rash Of Anti-War Incidents

From Times News Services

A group of anti-war demonstrators tried to storm an induction centre in Chicago today in another of a series of incidents designed to build up sentiment against U.S. Vietnam involvement.

Chicago police repelled the would-be intruders at the induction centre door and arrested 11 males and seven females.

About 70 persons had been parading in front of the induction centre, just west of Chicago's Loop, when some of them broke ranks and tried to enter the building.

In Wisconsin and California University authorities have moved against student leaders of anti-war and anti-draft protests after demonstrators in Madison and Oakland clashed with police.

In Washington sources said the U.S Army may use paratroops to augment the Pentagon's civilian guard force in preventing disruption or worse in a planned massive anti-war demonstration Saturday.

University of Wisconsin officials moved to oust leaders of a campus anti-war sit-in Wednesday which was broken up by riot-trained Madison city police. At least 65 persons were injured in the melee.

Demonstrators discussed classroom strikes as a possible retaliatory measure. They were supported by several hundred sympathetic faculty members.

The demonstrators were protesting the presence of representatives of the Dow Chemical Co., manufacturer of napalm for the war in Vietnam, on campus to interview job applicants.

VIOLATE RULES

On the west coast, Arleigh Williams, dean of students at the University of California's Berkeley campus, said his office will charge at least 20 students with violating university rules in the on-campus anti-war rallies.

Anti-draft demonstrators continued their protest at the besieged Oakland army induction centre and the arrest of 91 squatters at the door brought to more than 300 the numbers of persons seized since the protest began.

Governor Ronald Reagan, at the national governors conference on a cruise to the Virgin Islands, warned that if demonstrators step up their 'protest, California could use the national guard.

PORTLAND POLICE CUT ANTI-DRAFT 'CHAIN-IN'

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Six draft protesters chained themselves to the entrance of the Selective Service Office in Portland today.

They blocked the entrance for 45 minutes until police used metal cutters to snap the thick chains.

The protestors were dragged by their feet to a waiting police wagon chanting "Hell no, we won't go".

They were dragged about 30 feet with their heads against the ground.

They were charged with disorderly conduct.

They were all Reed College students, police said.

OTTAWA—Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes is expected to remain in his post for another six months.

It is understood he has been asked to remain for another six months and is expected to accept.

A spokesman at Government House today said Mr. Pearkes would not make any comment on the report because any announcement must come from Ottawa "but they're still hoping to move at the end of the month."

EARTH-LIKE ROCK INDICATED ON VENUS

By ROBERT EVANS

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Russia's Venus IV space capsule sent back messages indicating that the surface of Venus consists of solid rocks like those on earth, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today.

Dr. Vladimir Siforov, a prominent Soviet specialist on long-distance communications, told Tass that radioed reports as Venus reached the planet Wednesday indicated the surface rocks have physical properties like the silicates of the earth.

Before the landing there had been many theories about the surface hidden behind the shroud of clouds that veil Venus.

Experts' ideas about the surface ranged from a scorching inferno of dusty desert without a scrap of moisture to a waste covered with ice and water.

Tass quoted Siforov as saying the report on a rocky surface needed checking by an automatic station which would transmit information from the surface of the planet.

The Russians have not indicated the life expectancy of the instruments aboard the automatic station, but they did say the station was not equipped for picture transmission.

Members of the Soviet design team hoped the epoch-making Venus IV would discover life on the mystery planet, it was reported today.

But information relayed back during the instrument capsule's 90-minute float-down through the thick clouds around the planet indicated life is unlikely to exist there.

As it descended by parachute, the package reported there was no free oxygen in any significant quantity in the Venusian atmosphere and that the surface temperature was 530 Fahrenheit.

It also revealed that the main component of the planet's atmosphere was carbon dioxide and that pressure on the surface was up to 15 times that of the earth's atmosphere, all of which virtually precludes any form of life as it is known on earth.

SO ALANO LOOKS TO UNITED APPEAL

Spending Spree Over When Sober

By TED GASKELL

"We'd be broke by spring if it weren't for United Appeal," a member of the Alano Club said today, "and scores of reformed alcoholics would have lost their haven from the temptation of liquor."

With the $4,000 from the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal not only can the club stay open but it can brighten its fading interior and make it attractive to the men and women who use its facilities, not only as a temperance social club but to meet and discuss problems with their fellows.

The Alano Club has been operating, and paying its own way, for about 18 years, in its second floor quarters at Broad and Johnson.

Now it has fallen on hard times.

It takes about $400 a month for rent and other overhead. Less than 100 members pay their $2 a month dues and the club's savings, amassed during years of successful bingos and other functions, are dwindling.

During a tour of the club with its billiard room, games room, meeting room, lounge and coffee shop, the member said "the club is important to the reformed alcoholic. Once he has given up liquor he must have somewhere to go. It's no use him going to the cocktail bars and clubs with friends for his social life. He can't sit and drink ginger ale while his friends take liquor."

At least not at first. He might later when he becomes self-sufficient and doesn't need the Alano Club any more.

But the Alano Club is a "halfway point". Here the reformed alcoholic can meet others with the same problem. He can talk out his fears and worries, have a snack or a sandwich, a cup of coffee or a milk shake without being exposed to liquor in any way.

No one who has been drinking is allowed in the club. "We'll accept people with hangovers if they are members, but this isn't a sobering-up service," said the member.

Before anyone can join he or she—there are as many women as men among the members—must be a member of Alcoholics Anonymous and must have been sober for a month.

Although this is a stipulation, the club is not connected in any way with AA, although it does rent out its small meeting room to the local groups for their meetings.

The member told this story:

"I came here in 1951. I had money but no job, no self confidence or self respect and I was not welcome at home. But I have stayed sober, returned to my work and family and recently I retired."

"Thousands of people have been helped here. We get about 50 members a day dropping in to talk or for coffee. But not every story is a success story although many have been helped to get jobs and get back on their feet. Many are sent by hospitals and doctors."

Most alcoholics are in the business and professional group. "Less than 12 per cent are skid road types" said the member. "The professional man can afford to drink and he feels he has enough intelligence to drink without it becoming a problem. But they become alcoholics.

"We have had them here but they don't keep up their membership," he said. "They get back to their businesses or professions."

Don't they help out financially?

"It's the hardest thing in the world to get a dollar out of a drunk. When they are drinking they are the big time spenders but when they sober up they are more conscious of their obligations. For so long their families have taken second place."

"We have to look to United for our help," he said.

HOW WE IGNORE OUR OLD FOLKS

B.C. Offers Good Plan But Alberta Offers Cash

By PETE LOUDON

British Columbia has a plan for extension of $1 per day care for the incapacitated elderly who need bed care—but it's a long way from reality. This final chapter in a series tells how a neighbor province met a similar emergency without waiting for the community conscience to meet the need.

If you're broke and old in British Columbia, the best thing you can do for yourself is move to Alberta.

If you become so infirm in B.C. that you must enter a private hospital, the welfare department will pay $230 on your behalf, (including your pension cheque).

This is so far below the $270 that private hospitals say is required, you will have a hard time finding a bed.

In Alberta the private hospital would be paid $375 on your behalf.

You would pay $2.50 a day out of your old age pension and have money left over. The Alberta government would pay a $10 per day subsidy to make up the balance of your bill.

In B.C., your pension cheque would be forfeited and it would meet the first $105 of the $230 payment. Ten per cent of the balance would be recovered by the province from the municipality you live in. Fifty per cent would be indirectly paid by the federal government.

In B.C., the province actually pays only $50 of your bill—about 21 per cent. The federal government pays 75 per cent.

This is great for conserving provincial revenues to meet things like debt charges of hydro developments. But it works out tough for the patient.

Trust Firms Announce Merger

TORONTO (CP) — Shareholders of Eastern and Chartered Trust Co. and Canada Permanent Trust Co. have approved a merger of the two firms. Eastern and Chartered's name will disappear under the merger, which will give the Canada Permanent Trust Co. assets of about $2,000,000,000, making it Canada's largest trust company in terms of capital.

Officials said it is expected to process about $1,000,000,000 worth of mortgages yearly.

Federal Treasury Board approval is needed for the merger to take effect, but no difficulty in obtaining is expected.

Canada Permanent Trust is owned by Canada Permanent Mortgage Corp., which will buy the shares of the new company on the basis of three Mortgage Corp. shares for one Trust company share.

NEW ABOLITION BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

OTTAWA (CP)—The Commons today gave first reading to a government bill which would limit the death penalty to persons who are convicted of murdering police officers or prison guards.

Solicitor-General Pennell said the bill for a five-year test period would limit capital punishment to slayers of prison guards and police.

WON'T 'INTERFERE'

Sask. Takes Over College Finances

REGINA (CP)—Premier Thatcher said Wednesday night the provincial government will assume direct financial control of the University of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Thatcher, in an address to the Potashville Education Association, said that while the government will financially control the university, "it will not interfere with internal operations."

The premier also announced Welfare Minister McIsaac has been handed the provincial education portfolio and the job of spearheading a new approach to educational finance which will involve more government control in all education spending.

He said changes would be made in the education act to help control costs at the local levels.

"We do not intend in any way to impinge on local autonomy," he explained. "But I must say we shall try to find far more practical financial controls over the power of school boards to spend provincial money."

On university spending, Mr. Thatcher said:

"In essence, the university will be obliged to make its financial requests to the legislature in the same manner as any other department. For example, they will have to request so much for salaries, so much for travelling and so much for new buildings."

He said the university today is fast becoming one of the government's largest spending departments.

This year, the government must find $28,000,00 for University of Saskatchewan and the campus population is growing at a rate of more than 1,200 students a year.
